"UNDER FIRE"—Richard Harding Davis Writes of the Eccentricities of Soldiers and Civilians

Notable Instances of Daring or Demoralization in Europe's War

Bravery, Concludes Veteran Correspondent, Is Chiefly Power of Imagination and That Man Who Will Act Cowardly Under Some Circumstances, Will Become a Hero for a Cigarette or to Escape Cold Fingers or Minor Discomfort Because He Cannot Comprehend Death.

In the second of a series of weekly articles on the war, Richard Harding Davis, America's most famous war correspondent, who spent two months with the armies of the allies in Belgium and France, for the Post-Dispatch, paints a graphic picture of how soldiers and civilians act under fire of the enemy.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS...

AN elderly gentleman (in Rheims) told me how he had been seized by the Germans as a hostage and threatened with death by hanging. With 40 other first citizens, from Sept. 4 to Sept. 12, he had been in jail. After such an experience one would have thought that between himself and the Germans he would have placed as many miles as possible, but instead he was strolling around the Place du Parvis Notre Dame in front of the Cathedral. For the French officers, who, on sight-seeing bent, were motoring into Rheims from the battle line, he was acting as a sort of guide. Pointing with his umbrella he would say: "On the left is the new Palace of Justice, the facade entirely destroyed; on the right you see the palace of the Archbishop, completely wrecked. The shells that just passed over us have apparently fallen in the garden of the Hotel Lion d'Or. He was as cool as the conductor on a "Seeing-Rheims" observation car.—RICHARD HARDING DAVIS.

By Richard Harding Davis

ONE cold day on the Aisne when the Germans had just withdrawn to the east bank and the allies held the west, the French soldiers built huge bonfires and huddled around them. When the "Jack Johnsons," as they call the six-inch howitzer shells that strike with a burst of black smoke, began to fall, sooner than leave the warm fires, the soldiers accepted the chance of being hit by the shells. Their officers had to order them back.

I saw this and wrote of it. A friend refused to credit it. He said it was against his experience. He did not believe that for the sake of keeping warm, men would chance being killed. But the incident was quite characteristic. In times of war you constantly see men, and women, too, who, sooner than suffer discomfort or even inconvenience, risk death. The psychology of the thing is, I think, that a man knows very little about being dead, but has a very acute knowledge of what it is to be uncomfortable. His brain is not able to grasp death, but it is quite capable of informing him that his fingers are cold. Often men receive credit for showing coolness and courage in times of danger, when in reality, they are not properly aware of the danger and, through habit, are acting automatically. The girl in Chicago who went back into the Iroquois Theater fire to rescue her rubber overshoes was not a heroine. She merely lacked imagination. Her mind was capable of appreciating how serious for her would be the loss of her overshoes, but not of being burned alive.

At the battle of Valestinos, in the Greek-Turkish War, John F. Bass of the Chicago Daily News and myself got into a trench at the foot of a hill on which later the Greeks placed a battery. All day the Turks bombarded this battery with a cross fire of shrapnel and rifle bullets, which did not touch our trench, but cut off our return to Velestinos. Sooner than pass through this cross fire we crouched in the trench until about sunset, when it came on to rain. We exclaimed with dismay. We had neglected to bring our ponchos. "If we don't get back to the village at once," we assured each other, "we will get wet!" So we raced through half a mile of falling shells and bullets and, before the rain fell, got under cover. Then Bass said: "For 12 hours we stuck to that trench because we were afraid if we left it we would be killed. And the only reason we ever did leave it was because we were more afraid of catching cold."

In the same war I was in a trench with some infantrymen, one of whom never raised his head. Whenever he was ordered to fire he would shove his rifle barrel over the edge of the trench, shut his eyes and pull the trigger. He took no chances. His comrades laughed at him and swore at him, but he would only grin sheepishly and burrow deeper. After several hours a friend in another trench held up a bag of tobacco and some cigarette papers and in pantomime "dared" him to come for them. To the intense surprise of everyone, he scrambled out of our trench and, exposed against the skyline, walked to the other trench; and while he rolled a handful of cigarettes, drew the fire of the enemy. It was not that he was brave; he had shown that he was not. He was merely stupid. Between death and cigarettes his mind could not rise above cigarettes.

Varied Conduct at Rheims.

WHY the same kind of people are so differently affected by danger is very hard to understand. It is almost impossible to get a line on it.

I was in the city of Rheims for three days and two nights while it was being bombarded. During that time 50,000 persons remained in the city, and, so far as the shells permitted, continued about their business. The other 50,000 fled from the city and camped along the road to Paris For five miles outside Rheims they lined both edges of that road like people waiting for a circus parade. With them they brought rugs, blankets and loaves of bread and from daybreak until night fell and the shells ceased to fall, they sat in the hay fields and along the grass gutters of the road.

Some of them were most intelligent looking and had the manner and clothes of the rich There was one family of five that on four occasions, on our way to and from Paris, we saw seated on the ground at a place certainly five miles away from any spot where a shell had fallen. They were all in deep mourning, but as they sat in the hay field around a wicker basket and wrapped in steamer rugs they were comic. Their lives were no more valuable than those of thousands of their fellow townsmen, who, in Rheims, were carrying on the daily routine. These kept the shops open, or, in the streets, were assisting the Red Cross.

One elderly gentleman told me how he had been seized by the Germans as a hostage and threatened with death by hanging. With forthy other first citizens, from Sept. 4 to Sept. 12, he had been in jail. After such an experience one would have thought that between himself and the Germans he would have placed as many miles as possible, but instead he was strolling around the Place du Parvis Notre Dame in front of the Cathedral. For the French officers, who, on sight-seeing bent, were motoring into Rheims from the battle line, he was acting as a sort of guide. Pointing with his umbrella he would say: "On the left is the new Palace of Justice, the facade entirely destroyed; on the right you see the palace of the Archbishop, completely wrecked. The shells that just passed over us have apparently fallen in the garden of the Hotel Lion d'Or." He was as cool as the conductor on a "Seeing-Rheims" observation car.

He was matched in coolness by our Consul, William Bardel. The American consulate is at 14 Rue Kellerman. That morning a shell had hit the chestnut tree in the garden of his neighbor at No. 12 and had knocked all the chestnuts into the garden of the consulate. "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," said Mr. Bardel.

Knitting Under Fire.

IN the bombarded city there was no rule as to how anyone would act. One house would be closed and barred and the inmates would be either in their own cellar or in the caves of the nearest champagne company. These latter took with them books or playing cards, and among millions of dust-covered bottle, by candle light, they waited for the guns to cease. Their neighbors sat in their shops, or stood at the doors of their houses, or paraded the streets. Past them their friends were hastening, trembling with terror.

Many women sat on the front steps knitting and with interested eyes watched their acquaintances fleeing towards the Paris gate. When overhead a shell passed, they would stroll, still knitting, out into the middle of the street to see where she shell struck. By the noise it was quite easy to follow the flight of the shells. You were tricked by the sound into almost believing you could see them. The six-inch shells passed with a whistling roar that was quite terrifying. It was as though just above you invisible telegraph wires had jangled and their rush through the air was like the roar that rises to the car window when two express trains, going in opposite directions, pass at 60 miles an hour.

When these sounds assailed them the people fleeing from the city would scream. Some of them, as though they had been hit, would fall on their knees. Others were sobbing and praying aloud. The tears rolled down their cheeks. In their terror there was nothing ludicrous; they were in as great physical pain as were some of the hundreds in Rheims who had been hit. And yet others of their fellow townsmen, living in the same street and with the same allotment of brains and nerves, were treating the bombardment with the indifference they would show to a summer shower.

Hunting Bargain Soap.

WE had not expected to spend the night in Rheims, so, with Ashmead Bartlett, the military expert of the London Daily Telegraph, I went into a chemist's shop to buy some soap. The chemist seeing I was an American, became very much excited. He was overstocked with an American shaving soap, and he begged me to take it off his hands. He would let me have it at what it cost him. He did not know where he had placed it and he was in great alarm lest we would leave his shop before he could unload it on us. From both sides of the town French artillery were firing in salvos, the shocks shaking the air, over the shop of the chemist shrapnel was whining, and in the street the howitzer shells were opening subways. But his mind was intent only on finding that American shaving soap. I was anxious to get on to a more peaceful neighborhood. To French soap, to soap "made in Germany," to neutral American soap I was indifferent. Had it not been for the presence of Ashmead Bartlett, I would have fled. To die, even though clasping a cake of American soap, seemed less attractive than to live unwashed. But the chemist had no time to consider shells. He was intent only on getting rid of surplus stock.

The majority of people who are afraid are those who refuse to consider the doctrine of chance. The chances of their being hit may be one in 10,000; but they disregard the odds in their favor and fix their minds on that one chance against them. In their imagination it grows larger and larger. It looms red and bloodshot, it hovers over them; wherever they go, it follows, menacing, threatening, filling them with terror. In Rheims there were 100,000 persons and by shells 1000 were killed or wounded. The chances against were a hundred to one. Those who left the city undoubtedly thought the odds were not good enough.

Parisians and the Bombs.

THOSE who, on account of the bombs that fell from the German aeroplanes into Paris, left the city, had no such excuse. The chance of any one person being hit by a bomb was one in several millions. But even with such generous odds in their favor, during the days the bomb dropping lasted many thousands fled. They were obsessed by that one chance against them. In my hotel in Paris my landlady had her mind fixed on that one chance and regularly every afternoon, when the aeroplanes were expected, she would go to bed. Just as regularly her husband would take a pair of opera glasses and, in the Rue de la Paix, hopefully scan the sky.

One afternoon while we waited in front of Cook's office, an aeroplane sailed overhead, but so far above us that no one knew whether it was a French airship or a German one preparing to launch a bomb. A man from Cook's, one of the interpreters, with a terrible knowledge of English, said: "Taube, or not taube, that is the question." He was told he was inviting a worse death than from a bomb. To illustrate the attitude of mind of the majority of the Parisians, there is the story of the street gamin, who, for some time, from the garden of the Tuilleries, had been watching a German aeroplane threatening the city. Finally he exclaimed impatiently:

"Oh, throw your bomb. You are keeping me from my dinner."

A soldier under fire furnishes few of the surprises of conduct to which the civilian treats you. The soldier has no choice. He is tied by the leg and whether the chances are even or ridiculously in his favor, he must accept them. The civilian can always say: "This is no place for me," and get up and walk away. But the soldier cannot say that. He and his officers, the Red Cross nurses, doctors, ambulance bearers, even the correspondents, have taken some kind of oath or signed some kind of contract that makes it easier for them than the civilian to stay on the job. For them it would require more courage to go away than to remain.

Indeed, although courage is so highly regarded, it seems to be of all the virtues the most common. In six wars, among men of nearly every race, color, religion and training, I have seen but four men who failed to show courage. I have seen men who were scared, sometimes whole regiments, but they still fought on; and that is the highest courage, for they were fighting both a real enemy and an imaginary one.

There is a story of a certain politician General of our army who, under a brisk fire turned on one of his staff and cried:

"Why, Major, your are scared, sir, you are scared!"

"I am," said the Major, with his teeth chattering, "and if you were as scared as I am, you'd be 20 miles in the rear."

Men Fighting in a Daze.

IN this war the onslaughts have been so terrific and so unceasing, the artillery fire, especially, has been so entirely beyond human experience, that the men fight in a kind of daze. Instead of arousing fear, the tumult acts as an anesthetic. With forests uprooted, houses smashing about them and unseen express trains hurtling through space above them, the men are too stunned to be afraid. And in time they become fed up on battle and to the noise and danger grow callous.

On the Aisne I saw an artillery battle that stretched for 15 miles. Both banks of the river were wrapped in smoke; from the shells villages miles away were in flames, and 200 yards in front of us the howitzer shells were bursting in black fumes. To this the French soldiers were completely indifferent. The hills they occupied had been held that morning by the Germans and the trenches and fields were strewn with their accountrement. So, all the French soldiers who were not serving the guns, wandered about seeking "souvenirs." They had never a glance for the villages burning crimson in the bright sunlight or for the falling of the "Jack Johnsons." They were intent only on finding a spiked helmet; and when they came upon one they would give a shout of triumph and hold it up for their comrades to see. And their comrades would laugh delightedly and race towards them stumbling over the furrows. They were as happy and eager as children picking wild flowers.

It is not good for troops to sup entirely on horrors and also to breakfast and lunch on them. So, after one regiment has been pounded in the trenches, it is withdrawn for a day or two and kept in reserve. The English Tommies spend this period in recuperating in playing football and cards. When the English learned this, they forwarded so many thousands of packs of cards to the distributing depot that the War Office had to request them not to send any more.

Sharp Contrast of War.

WHEN the English officers are granted leave of absence they do not waste their energy on football, but motor into Paris for a bath and lunch. At 8 they leave the trenches along the Aisne and by noon arrive at Maxim's, Voisin's or La Rue's. Seldom does warfare present a sharper contrast. From a breakfast of "bully" beef, eaten from a tinplate, with in their nostrils the smell of camp fires, dead horses and unwashed bodies, they find themselves seated on red velvet cushions, surrounded by mirrors and walls of white and gold, and spread before them the most immaculate silver, linen and glass. And the odors that assail them are those of truffles, white wine and "artechant cause coussalina."

It is a delight to hear them talk. Their point of view is so sane and fair. In risking their legs and arms, or life itself, they see nothing heroic, dramatic or extraordinary. They talk of the war as they would of a cricket match or a day in the hunting field. If things are wrong they do not whine or blame, nor when fortune smiles are they jubilant. And they are so appallingly honest and frank. A piece of shrapnel had broken the arm of one of them and we were helping him to cut up his food and pour out his Scotch and soda. Instead of making a hero or a martyr of himself, he said, confidingly: "You know, I had no right to be hit. If I had been minding my own business I wouldn't have been hit. But Jimmie was having a hell of a time on top of a hill, and I just ran up to have a look in. And the beggars got me. Served me jolly right. What?"

I met one subaltern at La Rue's who had been given so many commissions by his brother officers to bring back tobacco, soap and underclothes that all his money save 5 francs was gone. He still had two days' leave of absence, and, as he truly pointed out, in Paris, even in war time, 5 francs will not carry you far. I offered to be his

"Will Persia Join Germany in Great War?"

Prof. Usher Discusses the Immense Strategic Importance of the Shah's Country to England and Russia in Present Crisis

Turkey's Asiatic Neighbor, Through Control of Trade and Military Routes and the Best Refuge Harbor in the Indian Ocean for Germany's Fleet, Becomes Vital to the Allies, Says Washington University Historian.

In this article, analyzing the importance of Persia in the great European war, the Post-Dispatch presents the first of a series by Roland G. Usher, Professor of History at Washington University and author of "Pan-Germanism," the most notable book of the day. Prof. Usher's articles will make clear to the reader the importance of the chief diplomatic and military moves of the warring countries. Prof. Usher originally intended to write of the invasion of Egypt, but altered his plan because of the greater significance now of the Persian crisis.

PRESSURE is being brought upon Persia by the Germans and the Turks to join them in the present war, and if the large German party in Persia should succeed in getting control of that state, its assistance would be very material to Germany and create difficulties for England and Russia which conceivably might compel them to send to the Near East troops which they cannot afford to spare from the battle fields of Europe.

Persia occupies an extremely important strategic position and one whose consequences are only too often forgotten. She holds the key to the roads between Europe and Asia. Through Persia have moved for centuries the caravans carrying trade between Asia and eastern Russia. Much of the trade of the Volga River in eastern Russia, practically the whole of the trade of the Caspian region depends upon the maintenance by Russia of access to these caravan routes. Just at present when the access to Europe, and to America, is difficult if not impossible for Russia on account of the war, her connection with Asia is more important than usual. Should Persia join Germany, these trade routes would be cut.

Southern Persia controls the roads along the Persian Gulf to India, the only land approaches from Asia Minor to India which are feasible for an army. If, for any reason, the English should lose control of the Suez Canal, this would be their only land route for sending reinforcements to India. Should Persia join Germany, it would practically mean that the Germans knocked at the gate of India.

Gulf a Stragetic Position.

THE Persian Gulf has only one opening and, therefore, would make an excellent naval station for a German fleet in the Indian Ocean, to which they could retreat if attacked by a large British fleet. It goes without saying that it would be an easy position for them to defend and it would afford a splendid position from which their cruisers could slip out to prey upon English shipping in the Indian Ocean. A German naval base which could be maintained by control of the land would, therefore, menace all English trade with India and its moral effect might almost be enough to bring that trade to a close for a time. The insurance rates soar at once when capture becomes possible, freight rates go up and the cost of shipping of goods, therefore, becomes very great and sometimes prohibitive.

There are already in the Indian Ocean some very active German cruisers who have sunk a great number of English merchantmen. With the Persian Gulf in German hands they will have a refuge and a base of supply.

We must not forget, also, that Persia, by its control of the roads into eastern Russia, would enable the German allies to invade the Caspian district with ease and lay waste the country. The hand of Russia in that part of the world has long been heavy. There are a good many tribes who hate the Russians intensely and who would be only too glad of an opportunity to take their revenge in the most approved Oriental manner. There may be, therefore, "barbarians" on the German side before very long.

Germany and Turkey are thinking of something more than the advantages which Persia's assistance would certainly give them. Persia is at present in the hands of England and Russia and is a very present danger to the allies of Germany in the Near East. Indeed, if Russia could spare the troops, Persia would afford the Triple Entente an excellent basis of operations and might almost succeed in robbing the Turk of most of his ability to help Germany.

As Basis for an Invasion.

PERSIA flanks the Turkish possessions in Asia Minor, and from Persia a very successful invasion might be made into the Turkish district farthest from Constantinople. The tribes in this part of the Turkish Empire are none too loyal and, if they join the invader, the invasion would have to be met by a considerable army. This explains the prompt expedition of an army by Turkey to this very district, which ought to have reached its position as the reader peruses these words. This army has, of course, been withdrawn from the army protecting Constantinople from an assault by Russia and has weakened the Porte in Europe.

Persia also flanks the Baghdad Railway and an English or Russian army in Persia would certainly make that road of very little consequence to Germany. Through those same passes an English or Russian army, or for that matter, a Persian army, would be in an admirable position to take the rear of any Turkish army which should attempt to move on the English possessions in Egypt. Indeed, as it is very likely that the Germans are planning an attack upon Egypt by the Turkish army, which is largely officered by Germans and commanded by a German General at present, this is the necessary first step toward the success of a German campaign on Egypt.

It is very important, therefore, for Germany to take the control of Persia away from England and Russia, who now hold it. The Germans and the Turks both have secret agents in Persia, the Pretender to the throne has publicly declared his adhesion to the German cause and a revolution in Persia against the present government (which is directed by Russia and England) is believed to be imminent.

Advantage of the Germans.

IT must be owned that the Germans have the advantage. The Turkish army is not only large but very capable. It is not needed in Europe at present. If it moves in force upon Persia, nothing can prevent it from taking possession of Persia except an equally large Russian army, or the dispatch of troops from the English-Indian army to Persia. It is by no means clear that Russia or England can spare so many troops as this for a campaign, so far distant from the field of battle in Europe. They may be forced, for the present, to allow the Turks to take Persia in Germany's interest. It is their misfortune, and upon this fact the Germans have often counted, that their empires extend over Asia and Europe and compel them to guard a vast area of territory with their armies. Now, when they are both anxious to put into the battle in Europe every available man, trouble in the Near East is particularly difficult for them to handle and the opportunity for a successful revolt particularly great. A large party of native Persians are eager for independence and are ready to welcome German assistance as a most important step toward that goal.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Menacing News From Mexico.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

It is bad news that comes from Mexico. Eulalio Gutierrez, notorious hater of all Americans, is chosen "provisional president for 20 days"—chosen by a military convention presided over by Villareal, the anarchist, and dominated by Villa, the ex-bandit.

This convention has declared for the Plan of Ayatla—the Zapata plan for the "immediate distribution of big estates," a plan that ignores the moral and legal rights of all landholders, foreign and Mexican alike, and which cannot be enforced without evoking a Mexican reproduction of the French Revolution.

Venustiano Carranza, acting President, stands alone for law and order; for just and peaceful restoration of the land to the people; for the dominance of civil over military law, and for the popular election of a genuinely constitutional government, unawed by military chieftains, just as quickly as these menacing factors can be brought to accept the verdict of such an election.

Carranza has made two bad mistakes: first, when he refused to give the Washington Government a guarantee that he would respect the acts of the military occupation of Vera Cruz; second, when he imposed a national tax of 60 cents a ton on oil. The first "put him in bad" at Washington; the second put him in worse with the American and English oil trusts. He now is opposed by honest but fanatical revolutionaries bent on executing a plan of land confiscation whose fruits of murder and rapine would horrify the world; by the military loot hunters, Villa foremost; and by the most powerful of the foreign exploiters of Mexican resources, atop of which his stubborn refusal to yield to guidance from Washington has made his position most difficult.

Nonetheless, he represents the best hope for the restoration of orderly civil government in Mexico, and for the satisfaction of some part of the popular demands that animated the revolution.

Washington may well stretch a point to back the hand of the First Chief against the unlovely combination which opposes him. There is not a ghost of a chance for that combination to get anything but further loss and misery for the Mexican people. ARTHUR McILROY.

War's Commercial Basis.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

The newspapers report that the Rockefellers are about to give millions to relieve the suffering in the war zone, should cause no surprise. No one disputes that this war is an outcome of that even more bitter commercial warfare which threatens to dehumanise the race. In the present scheme of things wars have their place. Indeed, by seeking to relieve this war of the burden of its own wreckage, the Rockefellers accord to it the prestige of an unavoidable calamity. Their efforts are but a part of the big game of business. A Red Cross ship is as truly a part of war's equipment as a battleship. In fact, if it were not for such benefactions (?) the progress of a war would soon be stopped by its own debris. P. SARTO.

An Independent Woman.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

I am a Catholic woman, a member of St. Francis Xavier's Parish and a priest's niece, and I would like to know who and what is the Catholic Union Missouri that issued circulars setting forth instructions to voters and telling them to vote down the Thirteenth Amendment.

I don't like the use of the word Catholic in connection with societies that issue political instructions. It brings the church into disrepute and gives color to the lies of its enemies, and if they are a body of either clerics or laymen or both I would advise them to attend strictly to their own business and not mix up religion and politics. They will defeat their own objects in doing so. I guess some clever politician is playnig his game and has a pack of "ninnies" under his thumb. I don't care about voting, but I am Irish and won't be dictated to. Where would the churches, any of them be but for the women? If we are smart enough to beg, collect money, manage entertainments, run orphan asylums and institutions, we are smart enough to vote.

AN IRISH CATHOLIC WOMAN.

Alas! Poor Patients!

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

A medical publication says: "There are a hundred different concoctions advertised. You can't tell which one you need. This, again, is guesswork—mere guesswork, when life and health are in the balance."

But how about the doctors? Don't they guess? How is it than an entirely different diagnosis is given by each doctor employed—perhaps a dozen of them on one case?

Surely this is a world of guess—and gas.

NEPTUNE.

CERTAINTY AND CONFIDENCE.

The remnants of the old guard of standpatism who have been elected to the Sixty-Fourth Congress are full of boasts and menace, but they never were more deluded in their lives.

They are not going to wipe out the laws passed by the Sixty-third Congress, for they have not votes enough. They are not going to revise the tariff upward in the interest of the trusts, or put the injunction shackles again upon lawful organized labor, or restore financial supremacy to Wall street or nullify the Sherman law or hand Alaska over again to the looters, or call back the lobby, because they cannot.

With an ample Democratic majority in both houses of Congress, everything thus far done by the Wilson administration will be safeguarded; the uncompleted Democratic legislative program will be carried out and reaction will be impossible. Even more to the point is the fact that the important gains in the Senate this fall probably assure control of that body for four years to come. Nothing but a sweeping political revolution in 1916 could restore Republicanism to power in that quarter before 1918.

As showing how unlikely such an upheaval must be regarded, there is another monumental fact which the elder statesmen have overlooked. The Democratic party in 1912, as they have truly said, was a minority party. It gained place through the division of its opponents. This year it retains office in the face of a Republicanism that in most places was practically united.

The Wilson reforms, then, are here to stay. They have been effected under very trying conditions at home and abroad. On a straight issue as to them they have been sustained. In force two years longer, the country will be no more inclined to go back to privilege, plutocracy and plunder than to slavery and secession.

It is this prospect of peace and progress that is giving confidence to legitimate enterprise all over the land. It is the knowledge that threats of political upheavals in the interest of selfish cliques and repudiated doctrines are futile that supplies honest men everywhere with the one inspiration that recently they have lacked.

THE ROCKEFELLER WAR PROGRAM.

The whole world will applaud the Rockefellers for their decision to spend millions of dollars, if necessary, relieving the homeless and hungry Belgian war refugees.

The whole American people would applaud them if they would adopt an equally humane and enlightened policy toward the homeless and hungry refugees from their war-stricken Colorado coal mines.

THE CRIMP IN A McCLUNG IDEA.

With the defeat of P. J. Murphy for Prosecuting Attorney in Cole County, State Chairman McClung's paramount issue of votes for your personal choice for office from the men with whom you "do your trading" has made its last as well as its first appearance in Missouri politics. On some accounts this is to be regretted.

It promised a delightful simplification of political action, for which incentives are now somewhat complex. Speaking of the man on whom you are dependent for your groceries or garden truck or other necessities, Mr. McClung wrote to 100 or more of his prison appointees, "if he cannot vote for Murphy, he is not entitled to your trade."

Every one of us, of course, is dependent in some degree on others for certain forms of service. The practical result, accordingly, of the prevalence of the McClung principle would be that all Democrats would ultimately come to rely on one set of men for household supplies and service, who in turn would reciprocate with their votes; all Republicans on another gratefully reciprocating set and all Prohibitionists and Socialists on still other sets. For Progressives and the members of other new parties to go unfed and unserved at first might be a little hard, but to arrange for special sets of men with whom to "do their trading" would be speedily recognized as an inevitable part of the labor in organizing new political movements.

The failure of the men with whom "you do your trading" to rally to Murphy at Jefferson City and his defeat by 931 majority puts an awful crimp in the paramountcy of the McClung issue. Apparently voters will continue as heretofore to be guided by principle at the polls, by the merit of public questions, by the worthiness and competency of individual candidates.

THE MAIN FACT AS TO COTTON.

It is this: Judging from all evidence in sight, cotton will have a market value of 12 to 15 cents a pound in 18 to 24 months.

Acreage reduction next year is to be enforced by Government decree in India and Egypt and by the instinct of self-preservation in the American cotton states.

Increased consumption, meantime, due to war's swift waste of fabrics, far outmeasures decreased consumption in normal lines, checked by war.

The answer, as affecting the future price of the commodity, is easy.

Growers forced to sell at present low prices will feel the pinch until they begin taking next season's grain and food crops, which hundreds of thousands of them will substitute in large measure for cotton.

Growers, and speculators holding 1914 cotton bought at this time will presently extend their investments in motor cars, player-pianos, bank stock, college degrees for their ambitious sons and daughters, and anything else that appeals to their fancy.

BRUSSELS' WAR INDEMNITY.

Dispatches from Amsterdam ask us to believe that the citizens of Brussels must pay to the Germans as tribute a sum every week that would be sufficient to sustain the lives during such week of more than 250,000 of the starving Belgians. The total tribute was alleged in August to have been fixed at $40,000,000. Lately it is said to have been reduced to $9,000,000 to be paid on the installment plan, $500,000 every seven days.

War indemnities have undoubtedly been levied on the noncombatants of some Belgian and French cities, but statements as to the amounts have varied and reports as to the success in collecting them have been contradictory. Now when relief even by the most expeditious routes will be unable to reach thousands of Belgians in time to save their lives, we are asked to believe that such resources as still remain in the country are to be depleted to fill the war chests of their subduers.

If that is true, then the Belgians' means of support are being taken away from them by the war machine and the rest of the world is asked to organize itself into a provident association to provide them support. In other words, we are taking up collections in St. Louis for the indirect replenishing of the funds in Spandau Tower.

Such an assumption is not to be credited. War has its atrocities, but it does not rob the poor box at the church doors.

PUSH THE PARKWAY.

Having wiped out the reproach of the unfinished municipal bridge and assured its completion, the people of St. Louis should concentrate on the parkway.

The opening of the parkway would mean more than the addition of a beautiful thoroughfare from Twelfth to Grand and the creation of a civic center; it would mark the beginning of desirable public improvements under the enlarged powers of the new charter. It would signify the determination of St. Louisans to realize the possibilities of a greater St. Louis.

The vote to complete the bridge was unique as a demonstration of the resolution of the people to complete an unfinished job of public utility. The making of the parkway would signify their resolution to use their charter powers to make greater St. Louis a beautiful city.

The parkway represents constructive work in the highest form, in the direction of municipal idealism, which is thoroughly practical, because it adds to attractiveness, to wholesome conditions and the joy of life in the city.

Push the parkway.

HOUSTON'S LUCK AND PLUCK.

Luck and pluck have a habit of running together.

The fact was illustrated at Houston, Tex., during the past week.

Houston, undismayed by hard times, intensified in the South by the smash in cotton, exhibited her pluck by voting, 3 to 1, $5,450,000 of city bonds: $3,000,000 for a first installment of municipal wharves on the ship channel which the Government has just completed, $1,000,000 for drains, $1,000,000 for sanitary sewers, $250,000 for park improvements, $200,000 for public schools.

During the same week George Hermann, a native Houstonian, dying full of years and honors, bequeathed his $5,000,000 fortune to establish a charity hospital. It will stand on a site across the road from a 200-acre park which Mr. Hermann recently gave the city, and near the Rice Institute's 300-acre campus, on which President Edgar Odell Lovett, late of Princeton, is bringing into being one of the South's foremost university foundations—the $10,000,000 gift of another late Houstonian.

Her new bond issues give Houston a larger bonded debt—$15,000,000—than any other American city of her size, and a larger per capita bonded debt than any American city except New York.

However that may be, Houston's refusal to get "cold feet" just because Europe has temporarily gone crazy and the rest of the world is running slow in consequence, is well worthy of emulation in St. Louis and other much larger centers of population.

MONARCHY AS AN INSTITUTION.

"Every institution whose origin antedated the French Revolution in Europe and more especially the monarchial," says Historian Ferrero, "appears to have been slowly committing suicide during the past 100 years." Have Europe's great Christian institutions been committing suicide? Have her philanthropic institutions that spread knowledge and promote the welfare of the people been committing suicide?

Only the monarchies and the institutions that perpetuate monarchies have declined. With every legitimist sovereign on the Continent a weakling or a lunatic 100 years ago, monarchy as an institution was strong. Now with an outfit of the most benevolent and enlightened sovereigns the Continent has ever known, monarchy as an institution is weakest.

HARD TIMES IN PALESTINE.

Little Palestine should not be ignored when response is made to the appeals for relief that are coming from many directions.

The distressing effects which the war has had on the Holy Land are unexpected and amazing to the rest of the world. Economically the country is dependent at best and the conflict has caused an almost total interruption of the stream of tourists from whom many residents obtain their livelihood. This alone would have resulted in much hardship, but in addition the Turkish Government has been making preparations for war that have stripped the region of resources.

Provisions of all kinds have been seized and horses and mules commandeered. No goods are going into the country. Even money orders sent by relatives and friends to relieve the wants of persons domiciled there cannot be cashed. It is said that the heads of 2000 Jewish families are among those impressed in the Turkish armies.

The Zionist movement, which has been slowly gaining strength for a generation, cannot, of course, have further support after the war unless additional safeguards are exacted from Constantinople. That so hopeful a movement should have as its chief result an increase in the resources on which unscrupulous Constantinople may draw at Jerusalem in the event of war is intolerable.

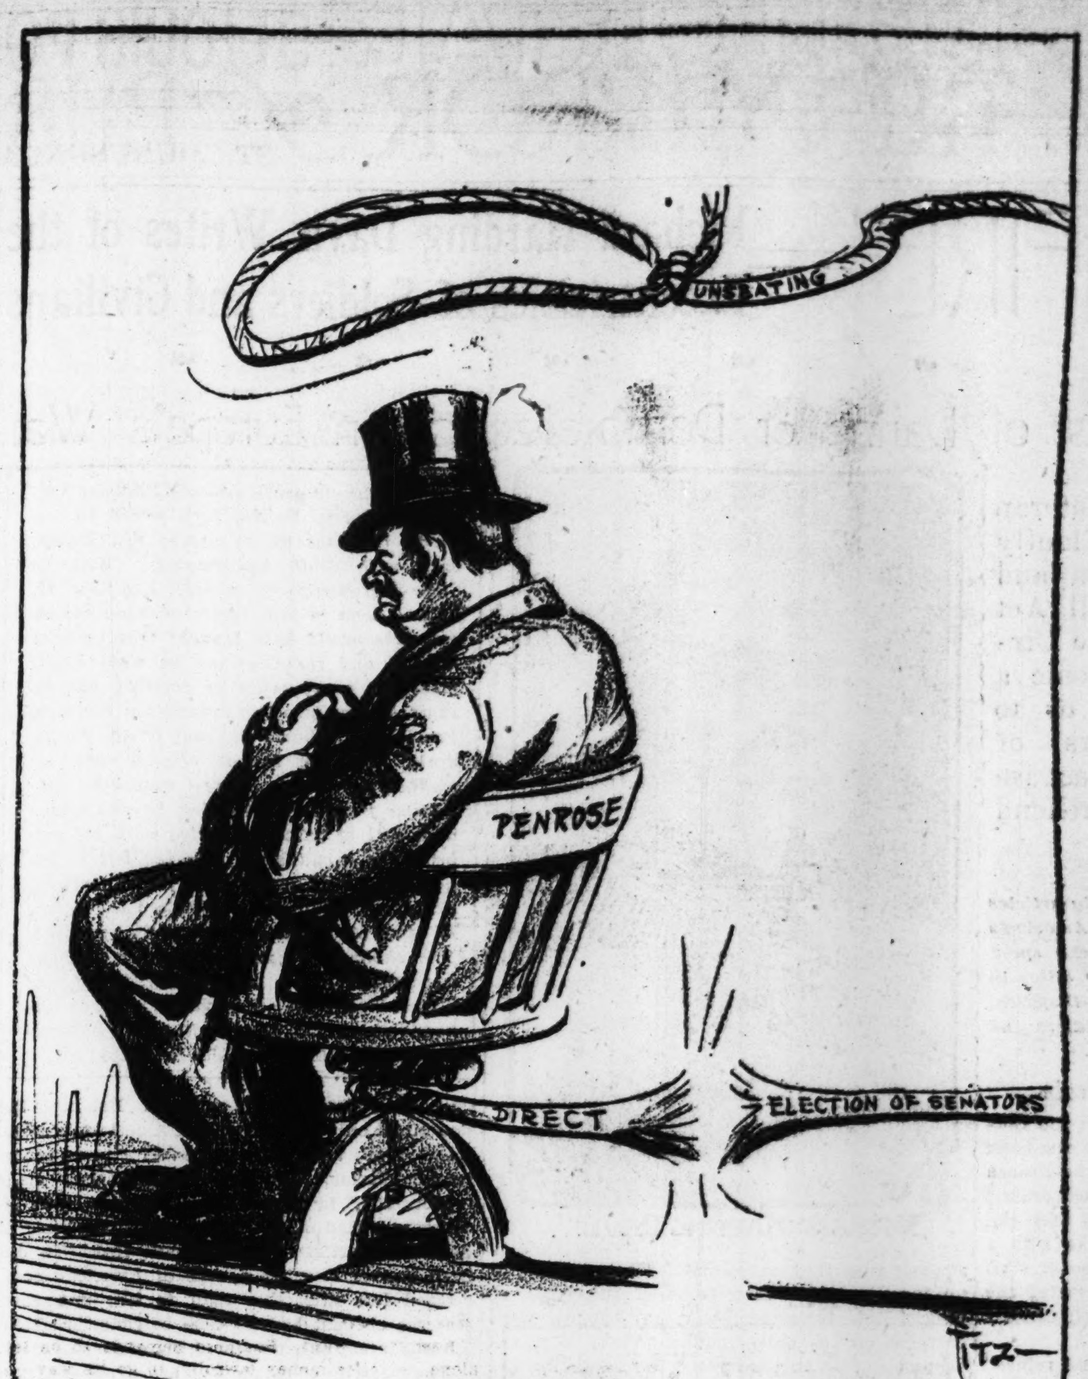
BRYAN MONEY IN MEXICO.

Here's a splinter of information that stuck in our eye as we perused a recent Mexican Herald:

> Money brokers in Vera Cruz are selling the American gold dollar at 4.50 Mex., the silver dollar bringing 4.30 Mex.

And instantly our thoughts reverted to the Hon. William Jennings Bryan and the great question of 1896. In those dear dead days beyond recall the eagle on the mooted American triumph of numismatics only screamed twice as loud as the buzzard on the despised medal of the Greasers. Now we perceive a ratio of 4½ to 1. And if times get cruel enough down there, the demonetization of the baser metal of the still baser Government may descend to something like the heaven-born ratio and a complete vindication of earlier American statesmanship with the reverse English.



SITTING PAT.

JUST A MINUTE.

PANETELA.

Yes, Luella,
All is over
At the fort
Of Kiaochau.
Peace and quiet
Have possession
Of the little Station now.
Yesterday,
Soon after breakfast,
The defenders,
With a cheer,
Gave it up
And asked the allies
In to have
A glass of beer.

They had held
The place, Luella,
For a term
Of ninety days,
Fighting Japanese
And British
In a half
A dozen ways,
On the hills
And in the water,
In the air
And on the ground,
All the world
Became a battle
Raging merrily Around.

It was like
A bunch of youngsters
With a woodchuck
In a hole:
First they set
The dog to digging,
Then they Punched him
With a pole.
Then they poured
A little water
In the tunnel
Through a hose,
While the Occupant attempted Respiration
Through his nose.

It is over,
Dear Luella;
With the Customary shout
On the part
Of the besiegers,
They at last
Have dug him out.
Six or seven Thousand Germans
Could not whip
A million Japs,
Any more
Than Armageddon
Shall be fought
With paper caps.

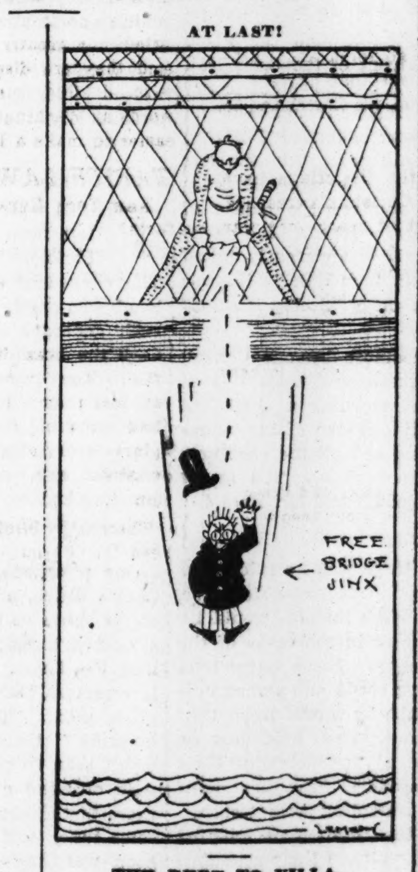
A Scotch Story.

The other day a little girl returned home from school and informed her mother that the schoolmistress severely punished her for failing to get through the geography lesson. The mother felt indignant and putting on her bonnet and shawl she set out for the school to investigate matters and interviewed the schoolmistress with no little vigor.

"You wud wallop ma bairn for no' sayin' her jography, wud ye!" she exclaimed. "Ah dinna ken jography, an' Ah hae a sister an' she's got a man an' a hoose wi' fower rooms an' a kitchen, an' a wee bit flo'er-garden, an' she disna ken jography; an Ah hae anither sister, an' she has a man, tae, an' six children, an' a hoose wi' five rooms an' a bath, an' she disna ken jography, but your heid's stuffed fou wi' jography, an' that's the wye yer no' able tae get a man an' wallop yer ain bairns, ye limmer ye!"

Mexico has a new President, the new being superfluous. She never has any other kind.

AT LAST!



THE DEBT TO VILLA.

The Democratic party must not too lightly regard its debt to Pancho Villa. Just at a time when a little fighting in Mexico would have cost the party command of Congress there was a noticeable easing off upon Villa's part. The Democrats won. They did not win by much, but it will be enough. The next day Villa resumed with his revolution. He had only slowed down at the crossing, so to speak, to let the Democrats pass. The plain sympathy of the administration with his revolution against Huerta was what did the trick. He is not incapable of gratitude, that Villa. Indeed, he is not incapable of anything, so far as we can observe. He may even be capable of being right all this time. Who knows? We are a long way from Mexican problems, and our sources of information are not all unprejudiced. At any rate, he did the Democratic party a graceful turn, and we would like to see some big Democrat say so. It is certain that the Republicans will never forgive him.

The new Governor of Tennessee has entered the State capital on a calf. That's nothing. We had Presidents of the United States going into Washington regularly on golden calves until we came to our senses and sent one there on a train.

Washington, Colorado, Arizona and Oregon went into the dry column Tuesday. The Great American Desert is determined to be a desert of some kind, despite irrigation projects.

If the Germans don't quit destroying the British navy piecemeal they will spoil the ultimate sea fight by making it easy.

Six thousand Germans are to be sent from Tsingtau to Japan as prisoners of war. If they stay on the island long enough they ought to be able to win the Japanese away from the rice habit with something that will make them a little more enthusiastic about meals.

ARMS AND THE NOVELIST.

From the London Queen.

These are hard times for the spinner of fiction. I do not mean merely in the matter of vanishing royalties and the fact that the ladies on whom he depends to devour "Her Muddled Marriage" and kindred masterpieces now read only in newspapers and works consisting of intricate combinations of the words "purl," "chain" and "treble." Herein his troubles do not differ in kind from those of the people who earn their bread and cheese by other crafts. The really hard case is that of the man who, with a promising story well in hand, finds his plot ruined as though a fair and well-designed edifice had been under shell fire. Think, for instance, of romances of the numerous "War of Nineteen-Something" class, whereof the very foundations are now shattered beyond hope. Some of the materials may perhaps be worked up later—much later—into prophetic warnings of the fate that awaits over-chivalrous conquerors; I foresee the utilization of many fearsome winged ships and appalling explosives in "The War of Vengeance," or "If William Rose." For the present they are useless.

Again, there is the popular type of Russian story that is compounded of noble nihilists (one of surpassing beauty and handiness with firearms), vile police spies, knouts, wolves and Siberia. The novelist must recognize that this old stock is a dead loss, and, if he really wants to write about Russia, take a course of Stephen Graham.

Perhaps something might be done in the way of a Stymied Novelists' Fund, applicants for relief to satisfy the committee that on Aug. 4, 1914, they had completed so many thousand words of a story the plot of which has been rendered obsolete by the war. Or claims might be filed, for settlement on the payment of Germany's indemnity.

Then there are all the stories which must be modernized and redecorated in varying degrees before they can be placed on the market. The dear provincial lady who fearlessly exposes the vices and follies of "Society" to the shocked but delighted gaze of the suburbs will go down no longer in Cambrai terrace and Joffre crescent unless she adds a few chapters presenting society in the act of coming out strong in war-time. Think of all the MSS. that must be recovered from the typist, and the "bits" that must be written in (newspaper files assisting the imagination); of the heroines who must exchange the part of companion or governess for that of hospital nurse; of the jilted lovers and underrated husbands who must be sent to the front, instead of going off to shoot big game or collect orchids! And, by the way, how soon the war would be over could the 1914-15 crop of heroes be materialized on the battlefields of France!

Yet there are compensations even in war. Something has come to take the place of the improbable shipwreck and the hackneyed railway smash as eliminator of the half-dozen relatives who stand between the hero and the baronetcy.

Fate of the Peacemaker.

From the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Probably the strong reason why Americans are not heartily desirous of having our Government too officious in offers to assist in bringing about peace is a lively recognition of the fate of the peacemaker who insists on interfering between two men who really want to fight.

Be Fair to Jep.

From the Kansas City Star.

But be fair to ex-Boss "Jep" Howe of St. Louis, who received $300,000 for services in getting a franchise for a street railway. He is a lawyer and that was his "fee" for professional services.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES

BAREBACK CAVALRY.

G. E. B.—All the renowned cavalry of the ancients rode bareback. The Roman cavalry that defeated Hannibal had no saddles; nor did Hannibal have any. Saddles were first used in the fourth century, A. D.; stirrups three centuries later. The Cossacks, the greatest cavalry, do not ride to battle bareback. The Cossack saddle is made of wood, the tree high up from the horse's back, the pommel and cantle high and nearly vertical, and the space between pommel and cantle filled with a large hair cushion covered with leather, and held in place by a surcingle. This makes the rider's seat almost flat and from six to eight inches above the horse's back. The Cossack rides with a very short stirrup, and his feet are always above the line of the horse's belly, thus making his seat appear forced and unnatural. He defends this style by saying that it removes all unsteadiness in the saddle, and, therefore, the horse, being relieved of such involuntary balancing of the rider, carries its burden more easily. On the other hand, he claims that when long distances are to be traversed, the natural weariness resulting from the deep seat and long stirrup lead to the fact that the rider, having no strong support, sits unsteadily, through fatigue. We know of no bareback modern cavalry.

BEAUTY CULTURE.

ELISA.—As a local remedy for muddy complexion buttermilk is an excellent bleach and at same time mild and soothing enough for delicate skin. Also pay attention to general health—to stomach and blood particularly.

S. V. W.—Best preventive of blackheads is a sensible diet, daily bath and plenty of exercise. The following remedy will help to remove the blackheads that have already appeared. Four ounces tincture of green soap, 4½ ounces witch hazel. Mix, apply every second day and wash off immediately with hot water. You may have to press on either side of the blackhead and force it out. Massage with an astringent lotion—one with tincture of benzoin in it—will sometimes, after months of work, affect the size of the pores, or will at least keep the distended pores from multiplying. Very often enlarged pores are the after-effects of pimples and blackheads.

NATIONAL ANTHEMS.

STUDENT.—Following are stanzas from various national hymns:

BELGIUM.

Fled the years of servile shame!
Belgium, 'tis thine hour at last.
Wear again thy glorious name,
Spread thy banner on the blast.
Sovereign people in thy might,
Steadfast yet and valiant be,
On thine ancient standard write:
King, and Law, and Liberty.

GERMANY.

Dear fatherland, no danger thine;
Firm stand thy sons to watch the Rhine!
They stand a hundred thousand strong,
Quick to avenge their country's wrong;
Affright and desolate the land.

While flows one drop of German blood,
Or sword remains to guard thy flood,
While rifle rests in patriot hand—
No foe shall tread thy sacred strand.

Our oath resounds, the river flows,
In golden light our banner glows;
Our hearts will guard thy stream divine:
The Rhine, the Rhine, the German Rhine!

FRANCE.

Ye sons of freedom, wake to glory!
Hark! hark! what myriads bid you rise!
Your children, wives and grandsires hoary,
Behold their tears and hear their cries.
Shall hateful tyrants, mischief breeding,
With hireling hosts, a ruffian band,
Affright and desolate the land,
While peace and liberty lie bleeding?
To arms, to arms, ye brave!
The avenging sword unsheath;
March on! march on! all hearts resolved
On victory or death.

GREAT BRITAIN.

God save our gracious King,
Long live our noble King,
God save the King!
Send him victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the King!

O Lord our God, arise,
Scatter his enemies,
And make them fall.
Confound their politics,
Frustrate their knavish tricks;
On Thee our hearts we fix,
God save us all!

AUSTRIA.

God uphold thee, mighty Emp'ror,
Monarch of Eastern land,
Power and Wisdom e'er attend thee,
Righteousness with thee shall stand,
Till with laurel crown'd, a victor,
All hearts bow at thy command.
God uphold thee, and defend thee,
Emp'ror of our Austrian land!

JAPAN.

Until this grain of sand,
Tossed by each wavelet's freak,
Grow to a cloudgirt peak,
Towering above the land;
Until thy dewy flake
Beading this blossom's gold
Swell to a mighty lake—
Age upon age untold
Joy to joy manifold
Add for our sovereign's sake.

RUSSIA.

God save our glorious Czar, noble and strong;
Lead him to victory, his power prolong.
Our ruler, mild and good, our church's shield;
God is thy sole defense in court and field.

Lord of all power and might, smile on us all;
Be thou our constant friend, save ere we fall;
All nations bow to thee, ruler divine;
Bless thine own heritage and make us Thine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ARKANSAS.—We don't know how you could prove that your Ulster Gazette is of the edition of Jan. 4, 1800.

H. S.—As to the books of Missouri authors for Panama Exposition, write: Miss Elizabeth B. Wales, secretary Missouri Library Commission, Jefferson City, Mo.

NEW SUBSCRIBER.—Only a certain amount of powdered tannin will be "taken up" in water. With this solution bathe lips to reduce thickness. If they become sensitive under this treatment apply the tannin in the form of a cream. Melt ounce of any standard cold cream; add to it one ounce each of pulverized tannin and alkanet chips; let combine for five hours; then strain through cheese cloth. Apply morning and night.

OLD READER.—It is better for a girl of 17, or of any other age, for that matter, to read a few poems thoroughly than to skim through whole volumes. You might find these worth while: Tennyson's "Maud," "Idylls of the King," "Princess;" Elizabeth Barret Browning's "Aurora Leigh," and "Sonnets;" Holland's "Bittersweet;" Keats' "Eve of St. Agnes," and the "Ode to a Grecian Urn;" Rosetti's "Blessed Damosel;" Bryant's "Water Fowl;" Shelley's "Skylark." Of course you should know Longfellow's "Evangeline," and "Hiawatha."

H. B. S.—An invention to revive dry battery cells applies to exterior of cell a casing carrying a dry electrolyte which, upon application of moisture, sets up a chemical action with the exterior zinc surface of the cell and, the latter being perforated, causes electrical action to be again produced. The casing or cup consists of an external waterproof casing and an internal absorbent lining. A sheet of the absorbent paper of proper size, to form a cylinder of desired diameter, is impregnated with a solution containing 10 parts muriate of ammonia, 4 parts bichromate of potash and 10 parts chloride of sodium. This sheet is then dried, preferably by passing it between rollers which serve to incorporate the chemicals firmly and to extrude the excess of water, and is wrapped around a wooden cylinder of appropriate diameter. It is then coated externally with a water-proofing paste. Around this is then wrapped a coating of manila paper, the end of the cup being formed by placing a disk of similar paper at the end of the cylinder in the inside and folding the sheet of manila paper over it. The usual external casing of paper is next removed from cell and the zinc surface cleaned. After wiping off surface zinc is perforated in a number of places with small sharp instrument and the coal tar in top of cell is removed by tapping around the edge with hammer. The cell is then placed within the prepared cup and the top is filled with clean rain water. Chemical action will immediately be produced between the outer surface of the zinc and the electrolyte contained in the porous lining of the cup and the terminals of the cell will show practically the same voltage as it did when new. By replenishing the water, say once a month, the life of the cell can be prolonged.

ANOTHER SHOULDER TO THE WHEEL.

Turkey Enters the Great War

SICK MAN STAKES ALL.

Chicago Herald: The Turk is an excrescence on the map of Europe. He has been sustained only by the jealousy of the warring Powers. But it is impossible not to recognize his bravery. He has staked his all and is seemingly willing "to bide the hazard of the die."

BERLIN'S CAT'S PAW.

Detroit Free Press: Turkey's action not only spreads the conflagration, but it throws a new light on the desperate character of the conflict being waged. Berlin is not calling upon Constantinople as a Government calls upon a natural or formal ally. It is using Turkey as a dupe, as a useful tool, cold-bloodedly, ruthlessly, without any regard for Turkey's welfare. How the German Government has molded Islam to its wishes is not altogether clear at this time, but naturally deceit and cajolery, appeals to passion and a desire for revenge, have all played their part. It must have been a delicate and subtle game that Berlin played, for Turkey has everything to lose and nothing that is really worth while to gain by going into the war. If Germany loses, Turkey is destroyed, blotted out. If Germany wins, it may recover a lost province or two, but it will remain a practical vassal of Berlin.

EVERYTHING TO LOSE.

Philadelphia Ledger: Whatever the final outcome, the future of Constantinople will be decided by it. If the allies win, the city will go to Russia, which has long looked upon it with envious eyes. If the allies lose it will come into German hands and be the center of hitherto frustrated imperial ambitions in the East. It cannot remain Turkish. For there will be no Turkey on that side of the Bosporus.

MAY AFFECT PALESTINE.

Washington Post: One of the interesting possibilities of Turkey's outbreak is the wrenching of Palestine from the Turk and the restoration of the Holy Sepulcher to Christian hands. Indeed, the occupation of the seaports of Asia Minor and Palestine is likely to be one of the first acts of the British fleet.

"THE TURK MUST GO."

Louisville Evening Post: Now the end approaches. In 1877 Russia defeated the Turk and was deprived of the spoils of victory. Austria interfered in the Balkans to seize land she had not fought to gain. After the revolt of the oppressed nations, two years ago, had been successful, the military monarchies of Europe interferred to restrain the power of the free and fighting nations. Now Turkey enters the war arena and seals her doom. The Turk must go. The "balance of power" has fallen under the power of militarism. These are the relics of the revival of medievalism, and above all dynastic interests, above all territorial lines, rises a new democracy, the hope and the inspiration of awakened people in all lands.

WILL HASTEN THE END.

New York Tribune: Turkey's participation in the great war may give it a very dangerous extension and introduce into it the savagery of religious fanaticism. But if her example is followed by Greece, Rumania and Italy—they taking sides against Germany and Austria-Hungary—a quicker ending of the war ought to result. Italy's co-operation would turn the scale strongly in favor of the allies, since it would foreshadow the swift collapse of Austria-Hungary's resistance. Vienna could not long be held against Italy, Montenegro, Servia, Rumania and Russia, and, as Bernhardi justly says, without Vienna, Austria-Hungary cannot remain a nation.

Turkey's running amuck in the Black Sea may therefore in the end hasten rather than retard a decision in what has now become more than ever an Asian and African as well as a European conflict.

THE SULTAN'S VISION.

(Hannibal, in Rochester Post-Express.)

The Sultan mused in the rose kiosk,
"If it was, as it must be, sooner or later,
That the Christians armed themselves for the fray.
Marshaled their hosts to go forth and slay—
Ah, that I might live to see that day!
For great though the God of the Christians be,
Allah is greater.

"Knowledge and power the Christians have,
And Ind is naught to the Christian's treasure;
But their God is the God of peace—not war,
And Allah is lord of the sword, Akbar!
And the cross must fall when the scimetar
Is once again of the prophet's law
The only measure.

"While they fly lik dogs at each other's throat,
Teuton and Frank and Russ and Angle,
Sworn brothers these be in their simple creed;
But brothers in naught save envy and greed;
How will their symbol serve their need?
And Allah is mighty in Asia still,
And mightier as they wrangle."

The Sultan smiled in the cool kiosk,
While Asia's burning sun was setting
Over the gray Marmora Sea,
As he thought of the power again to be
With the myriad hosts of Islam free—
All patiently waiting the Caliph's nod,
And unforgetting.

THEY EAT EACH OTHER UP.

Constantinople Orient: The Tanin writes editorially of the way Europe is suffering for her treatment of Turkey:

"They would not look at the evils in their own countries, or elsewhere, but interfered at the slightest incident in our borders; every day they would gnaw at some part of our rights and our sovereignty; they would perform vivisection on our quivering flesh and cut off great pieces of it. And we, with a forcibly controlled spirit of rebellion in our hearts and with clenched but powerless fists, silent and depressed, would murmur as the fire burned within: 'Oh, that they might fall out with one another! Oh, that they would eat each other up!'

"And lo! today they are eating each other up, just as the Turk wished they would. Whatever people may say, there is in the nature of things an essential justice that will at last come to light. To the benighted and the victims of injustice it brings a smile on the face and a joyous lightening of the heart."

A WAR OF CONTINENTS.

Cincinnati Enquirer: Turkey's entrance into the war of the nations make it now a war of the continents, for Asia, Africa and Europe are now involved in the strife, and the fields of battle are apt to be found all along the paths of Alexander, of the Pharaohs, Darius, the Mede, and Cyrus, the Persian, and Tamerlane, as well as those in Europe of Marlborough, Turene, Napoleon and Wellington.

TURKEY AS AN ALLY.

Philadelphia Record: The value of Turkey as an ally of the German-Austrian combination should not be underestimated. Of course, if the entente Powers are victors in the war it might go hard with Turkey, but the Turks seem willing to take a gambler's chance. The threat to destroy their empire in Europe has lost force since that empire has practically ceased to exist; and the Turks know they can retain Constantinople, because the Powers cannot agree upon an alternative possessor.

Meaning of the Elections

RETURN OF THE BULL MOOSERS.

New York World: In 1912, more than half of the Republican party, seceding from the regular organization, was singing "Onward, Christian soldiers" and battling for the Lord at Armageddon. This year, three-quarters of the Progressive Republicans who followed Mr. Roosevelt in 1912 have returned to the Republican ranks. The Republican party to which they have returned is not a regenerated Republican party. It is the old reactionary Republican party which they repudiated two years ago. It is the Republican party of Penrose and Cannon and Gallinger and Brandegee and Ebenezer J. Hill, whose leadership in 1912 was the justification of the Progressive secession. Even in Pennsylvania, which Mr. Roosevelt carried in 1912 and in which he made his most energetic campaign against Republican corruption in 1913, Penrose is re-elected to the Senate by a plurality of staggering proportions, and Penrose owes his victory to voters who were frenzied and fanatical in their support of Mr. Roosevelt two years ago.

The significant thing of this election is not that the Progressives have returned to the Republican party but that they have returned to the same kind of Republican party that they left in 1912. There is not a drop of Progressive blood in its veins. All its triumphs in Tuesday's elections were triumphs of political reaction. It stands today for everything it stood for in 1912, when the Progressives repudiated it as the sum total of iniquity, yet its gains in this election are all due to the return of the Progressive voters to its ranks, and every Progressive who voted the Republican ticket Tuesday voted squarely for the things against which he revolted in 1912.

Was the Progressive party ever really serious? Or was it merely a political joy ride which several million voters took for a change of air?

A DINNER PAIL VOTE.

New York Sun: Business demands to be let alone, to make money lawfully, to go its way on its own initiative and without the everlasting injection of Federal interference. Politics has been kicking business for years. Business took its revenge by kicking politics last Tuesday. Everybody is willing to do justice to Mr. Wilson's admirable and noble qualities. But the work of Congress is his work. The renaissance of the Republican party proves that that work has not satisfied, has greatly dissatisfied millions of voters. And they are dissatisfied because they see that with all this fine intention and all these fine words at Washington, it is become harder and not easier to make a living.

TARIFF LAW A FACTOR.

New York Herald: What are the outstanding facts?

1. There was no repudiation by the country of President Wilson's foreign policies. These proved an element of strength for his party, not one of weakness.

2. There was distinct and decisive protest by many voters in important states against the tariff law made by the President and his party associates, and of other measures believed by those voters to have contributed toward business uncertainty, and, where it exists, business depression.

There is no blinking the fact that men who have been thrown out of work since the advent of the Democratic administration, men whose wages have been reduced and who see no prospect of return to a condition which they had come to regard as normal—these men voted the Republican ticket because they hold the Democratic party responsible for what has happened.

A REBUKE FOR ROOSEVELT.

New York Times: Since he left the White House, Mr. Roosevelt has made a bad mess of it in politics. He set out to destroy the Republican party and the Republican party has renewed its strength. He assailed with his customary ferocity both Mr. Whitman and Mr. Sulzer. Mr. Whitman is elected by a very big majority and Mr. Sulzer, whom the Colonel denounced as a "crook," has polled more than double the number of votes recorded for Davenport, the Colonel's candidate.

All over the country, save in California, the Progressive party has been practically reabsorbed into the Republican organization. There are many fields of activity in which Mr. Roosevelt could be both interesting and useful. If he will put aside his political ideas, which the country has most emphatically rejected; his political ambitions, which have been and will be fruitless, and his grudges, which are unworthy of him, he can rise to a very high place in the esteem of his countrymen. He would make a very picturesque sage.

HAS WILSON FAILED?

New York Tribune: According to the popular judgment, Mr. Wilson's administration has been a failure. And the popular judgment is generally final in such matters. It is easy to see where the President failed.

His radical mistake from the political point of view was in not realizing that he was the choice of a minority of the nation. He went into office only because the elements which had long constituted the majority split on a question of party administration. He had a fortuitous majority in Congress and proceeded to make use of it as if he had obtainted a real grant of power from the people.

He kept Congress in session for 18 months without a break and imposed on the country a vast mass of legislation for which it felt he had never received a proper popular mandate.

Mr. Wilson's attitude of absolute self-sufficiency grated on the public.

THE END OF A PARTY.

Indianapolis News: The Progressive party died yesterday. When questioned last night, Mr. Roosevelt said: "I have nothing to say. It does not seem to me that, under the circumstances, a statement could be expected from me." Perhaps not—nor does it matter. Roosevelt's candidate, Davenport, ran fourth in New York. In Ohio the Progressive vote dropped out of sight. In Pennsylvania Pinchot, candidate for Senator, ran third, being defeated by both Penrose and Palmer. In this State Beveridge is a very poor third, having been beaten in his home county by both Shively and Miller. In Massachusetts the Progressive vote fell off by 80 per cent, the party's candidate for Governor receiving but 22,000 votes.

It is the same everywhere. The party may continue to "stand at Armageddon," but the host will be so small as to be unable to make much of a fight "for the Lord." There was never anything to it except the personal element. In national affairs it was merely a Roosevelt party, and in Indiana it seemed to exist simply for the purpose of electing Beveridge to something. Incidentally, it may be remarked that "the third cup of coffee" now seems very remote and shadowy.

EXTREMES WILL MEET.

Springfield Republican: While the return to Congress of many men of the Cannon type shows the essential character of the overturn, a striking contrast is offered in the election of a Socialist from Victor Berger's old district in Milwaukee and also the election of a Socialist, Meyer London, from New York City. Mr. London will be New York's first Socialist Congressman, and the Socialist party of two in the House will be the largest Washington has thus far known.

MAKES DEMOCRATS RESPONSIBLE.

Indianapolis News: The important lesson of the election is that henceforth the Democrats will have to win on their own merits, since the Progressive party, which was so valuable to them, has practically disappeared.

There is no further question of the effect of the voting on the fortunes of the President. We think that in several cases he used the great asset of his popularity to work in a way that he should not have done, as when he sent Mr. Bryan into this State—or permitted him to come—to speak, not only for the national party, but for the Cook ticket. That was a mistake, and a grievous one. Mr. Wilson is strong with the people precisely because they believe that he stands for them and against the bosses. He should not forget the obligation that rests on him to protect the people against the bosses, and never to line up with them. The President suffered from the slump that so often comes midway of an administration, and also from depressed business conditions. But, as it is, he seems certain to have a friendly Congress. So he and his party will continue to be responsible for whatever is done or not done during the next two years.

NOT A LANDSLIDE.

Philadelphia Record: When Theodore Roosevelt was elected President in 1904 the Republicans at the same time made it a sweeping victory in Congress, winning 249 seats to only 137 for the Democrats. That is what we should call a political landslide. Republicans who already see a great triumph in 1916 will do well to compare their representation in 1904 with that gained in 1914 in a considerably larger Congress, and then they will realize what a long distance they have still to travel. That little slip on Tuesday was not of Culebra cut dimensions.

NATION STANDS BY WILSON.

Chicago Journal: In spite of a crowd of unfavorable happenings, which made it seem that the stars in their courses were fighting against the democracy, the American people have indorsed Woodrow Wilson, the President who has maintained peace with honor, and led his party to the accomplishment of more constructive reform in eighteen months than ever before was packed into five years.

PROBABLE EFFECT ON CONGRESS.

Detroit Free Pres: The rebuff ought to do the Democrats a great deal of good. They retain control of Congress, but they will hereafter be far less cocky than they have been. They have been forced to realize what they have persistently ignored, that they never had the mandate of the people for any act because the people never intended to give them power. We shall probably see a much subdued Democratic Congress in the next two years. The party's modified spirit is not likely to save it in 1916, from all appearances, but it will save the country a continuance of the extreme arbitrariness and the reckless extravagance of the last two years, and for that we may be truly thankful.

A SIGNAL VICTORY.

Louisville Courier-Journal: It is almost the invariable rule that two years after a presidential election in which Congress goes with the President the House of Representatives is carried decisively by the opposition.

That it was not so carried this year is a signal victory for the President and his party. And that such a victory could be won this year when so many things that influence the unthinking voter against the party in power handicapped the administration, is a remarkable evidence of the strength of the President, who was elected as a hope and who is now indorsed as that hope more than made good.

WILSON IN 1916.

Washington Times: Champ Clark said, not long after the election of 1912, that if Wilson succeeded, nobody else could possibly be nominated; if he failed, nobody else would be willing to be nominated.

The record, as made up at the polls yesterday, clearly points to the renomination of the President, on the ground that the nomination will not be in sufficient demand to justify a fight against the administration's forces for it.

Relief for Starving Belgium

GERMAN RESPONSIBILITY.

New York World: Unless the greatest tragedy known to the modern world is to take place in Belgium this winter, humanity must go to the rescue. By so doing, however, it assumes certain risks. If by any plea of military necessity the desolation of that country was imperative, will not charity itself be under the invader's suspicion, and what assurance will it have that its supplies will not be confiscated, as everything else has been?

Those who would feed the hungry and clothe the naked must first make sure that they are not interfering with the settled plans of German militarism. Morally, the Belgian people are as much a charge upon the imperial Government at Berlin as any of its prisoners of war. Will the heartlessness that despoils them in their misery also despoil them in their relief?

A HINT TO CARNEGIE.

Washington Herald: With a million Belgian homes destroyed and another million rendered uninhabitable, with six million to seven million people destitute and facing actual starvation and supplies for bread lines and soup kitchens in need of daily replenishment, there must be a steady demand on the surplus resources of the rest of the civilized world. The task of relieving such unprecedented distress and misery is appalling in its magnitude. The Rockefeller foundation, it is announced, is prepared to spend millions in the work if necessary, and there is no doubt that it will be necessary. In the meantime, what good is the vast income from the Carnegie endowment for international peace doing? It has failed of its purpose so far, and might well be devoted to the relief of the suffering resulting from a war that it was beyond human power to prevent.

SPRINGFIELD WILL HELP.

Springfield Republican: Belgium lies prostrate. Over it swarm hostile troops. The Government exists, but it has no land to govern; it has no means of relieving distress; its people depend for their very lives on the mercy of strangers—British, Dutch, Americans.

The people of Springfield will give whole-souled support to the movement which has just been started here to aid the widows and orphans of Belgium. The work is in good hands and it is allied with a strong organization in Boston. Let it be thoroughly understood: this relief work is not for the fighters, whatever may be the sufferings and the needs of the sick and wounded soldiers. It is for the women and children of little Belgium, cold and hungry and homeless. Those who give will not have to find their reward in heaven. It will be immediate; they will know at once that the misery of poor creatures has been lessened by just so much as Springfield may contribute to their relief.

LET EVERYONE CONTRIBUTE.

New York Evening Post: Were it not for the appalling extent of the need, the fact that the Rockefeller foundation had taken hold might serve as a reason for ordinary contributors feeling less called upon to help. In reality, however, great as may be the sums which the foundation will devote to the purpose, they will fall far short of supplying even the most desperate needs, not to speak of providing in anything like sufficient degree for the relief of those sufferers who are in sore straits though not in downright danger of starvation. It is upon our country, alone of all the great nations of the Western world to be outside the range of the war, that the duty and privilege falls of providing help upon a scale corresponding to the requirements of this world-wide calamity. All that we shall do, though we do our best, will go but a small way towards alleviating the unspeakable distress of millions of innocent human beings. Let every person contribute according to his means; and let the result be such, not only in its total, but in the multitude of the persons participating, that we shall be able hereafter to look back upon the record with satisfaction.

New Mexican Crisis

EULALIO GUTIERREZ.

Baltimore Star: The Aguascalientes conference has at least occasioned a brief respite in the revolutionary game down in Mexico. The conference has solved the difficulty of deciding between Carranza and Villa for provisional President by selecting another war chieftain who is supposed to be a friend of both the revolution-of-the-north claimants, but who, in the sequel, may very likely turn out to be a friend to himself. At any rate, there is going to be another period of watching and waiting, long or short as the case may be, until it becomes a plain matter of demonstration just how Eulalio Gutierrez will undertake to arrange matters pending the proposed national election.

Possibly he may be the long-searched-for George Washington of Mexico.

CARRANZA'S "NOISE."

Philadelphia Record: While the convention at Aguascalientes is making history (of a kind) the Carranza regime at Mexico City is making a noise. Among other noises there is a repudiation of the agreement made by Gen. Funston with Gen. Aguilar to protect those Mexicans who aided the Americans in the government of Vera Crus from prosecutions for high treason and similar demonstrations of Mexican patriotism. There is also a note from Carranza's manager, the sinister Fabela, who carries the title of Secretary of Foreign Affairs, insisting that the United States fix a date for the evacuation of Vera Cruz unconditionally. The Aguascalientes convention may be open to criticism for its extreme radicalism and confiscatory designs; but the Carranza outfit is what society women would call "impossible."

WHERE IS THE STRONG MAN?

Philadelphia Ledger: At this distance from the scene it looks as though neither Villa nor Zapata will consent to retire to private life until he is forced to flee to save his neck. Carranza's offer to leave the country in the interest of peace if Zapata and Villa will only leave their armies sounds well, but as it follows a demand that the two bandits allow him to be the only candidate for the presidency, these two probably know how much confidence to put in the offer, just as they know how little significance there is in the result of any popular election in their country where the voters cast their ballots in accordance with the orders of the soldiers.

The strong man who is to rule has not yet asserted himself. He may emerge from the convention before many days with a proclamation that the others resist him at their peril. Madero was a dreamer, and he failed. Huerta was a man of blood and iron, but President Wilson forced him out. Carranza is trying to be a conciliator at a time when his rivals are in no mood for conciliation. It does not yet appear whether he is speaking softly as a preliminary to using a big stick. But the revelation of his purpose cannot be delayed much longer.

This Week to Be a Busy One for Debutantes ---Three Buds to Be Formally Presented---Lennox Club to Give First Dance---Grand Opera to Hold Sway at Odeon.

By Frances Cabanne Scovel.

THIS will be a busy week for the debutantes with two coming-out teas, a large evening reception and the first Lennox dance, to say nothing of the opera.

Three of the season's buds will be presented formally this week, one Thursday afternoon, another Thursday evening and another Friday afternoon.

EVERYBODY IS KNITTING FOR THE RED CROSS.

For the first time in more than a decade Mrs. James Depantreaux Lucas will open her home at 4370 McPherson avenue, when she will give a tea to introduce her granddaughter, Miss Florench D'Arche Lucas, the debutante daughter of Mrs. James Hunt Lucas. The hostess' daughter, Mrs. George Clayes, will assist.

Thursday evening Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Rand will present Miss Annie Laurie Warmack, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert N. Warmack, who came here from Tennessee about two years ago to reside.

The affair will be a reception at the Rand mansion, 7100 Delmar boulevard, in the evening from 8 to 10 o'clock After that there will be a dance for the debutante set.

Friday—and the thirteenth—Miss Juanita Wilkinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Melville L. Wilkinson, will make her debut at a tea which her mother will give at the Wilkinson residence, 4401 Westminster place. Miss Wilkinson is a girl with the courage of her convictions, and either is, or is not, superstitious—depending upon the point of view—because she deliberately chose Friday the 13th for her coming out. Probably the day and date hold a charm of good fortune and not ill luck for her. The tea will be followed by a dance, and several of Miss Wilkinson's former schoolmates are coming from the East for the affair.

THE first Lennox will be held Tuesday evening at the Woman's Club and this year the debutantes who have been fortunate enough to be asked to belong will be in the receiving line with the board of governors.

The Lennox dances, for two years, have been a strong factor in the social life of St. Louis and its list of membership includes nearly 200 of what usually is called the dancing set, made up of belles and beaux and some of the young married persons. It has been a most successful organization and its affairs as "smart" as can be without the stiffness that nearly always overshadows the gayety of an exclusive function.

The board of governors this season are Messrs. and Mmes Samuel D. Capen, Clinton L. Whittemore, Leo de Smet Carton, Frederick G. Zeibig, James Ford Jr., John Nickerson Jr., Samuel C. McCluney, Alden H. Little and Sterling Edmunds.

The debutantes who will receive will be Misses Mary Little, Mildred Papin Lloyd, Cora Pittman, Nancy Scott Edith Whittemore, Juanita Wilkinson, Elsa Zeibig, Mary Bullen, Lucile Cornet, Clara Busch, Katherine Lemoine Guy, Annie Laurie Warmack, Mary Nagel, Marion Bond, Nancy Bates, Ruth Bixby, Emilie Maffitt Cabanne, Emma Garesche and Mary D. Jones.

TOMORROW evening the two-weeks' season of grand opera will open at the Odeon, when society, in its best mood and clothes, will assemble for the first performance.

It promises to be one of the most brilliant opera seasons since the days when St. Louis had, at least, a whole week of grand opera during the winter and everybody went every night.

In the company—the San Carlo—are a number of artists well known and well liked here, and many others new to us, who, according to promise, will make the old operas to be sung a joy to hear. They all are operas we have been "brought up on," and the subscription list already is a long one and insures the success of the season.

Among the hostesses who will have box parties the opening night will be Mrs. Lon O. Hocker and Mrs. George M. Byrnes.

The season box holders are: Joseph D. Bascom, W. K. Bixby, August A. Busch, B. F. Bush, George W. Brown, Mrs. A. H. Bray, Daniel Catlin, Edward A. Faust, W. C. McBride, Miss W. E. Mitchell, H. L. Parker, H. W. Peters, John C. Roberts, George W. Simmons, Charles A. Stix, Festus J. Wade, Julius S. Walsh, M. L. Wilkinson.

THE University Club's annual dinner dance, which for many years has been one of the events of Thanksgiving week, will be given Dec. 1.

New hats for reception or street wear. Sally Meagher, 801 Century Building.

TWO engagements were added last week to the already long list of fall betrothals—that of Miss Helen Ittner to J. F. Auguste Lorber of New Orleans and New York and Miss Margaret Warfield to Charles C. Curry.

Miss Ittner is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William B. Ittner of 5553 Bartmer avenue. The announcement was made at a luncheon given Thursday by Mrs. Ittner. The marriage will be in midwinter.

The engagement of Miss Warfield and Mr. Curry was announced yesterday afternoon at a small tea which Miss Mildred Glover gave in honor of the bride-elect. The marriage will be the last of January. Miss Warfield is the daughter of Mrs. L. A. Warfield of 5151 Waterman avenue.

THERE is talk of making the first Imperial ball this year a Red Cross ball, that is, to have the simplest dance possible and give the difference between the cost of it and the cost of the usual elaborate affair to the Red Cross Society.

Everywhere, especially in the East, the most interesting kind of entertainments are being given for the benefit of the Red Cross, and St. Louis, rather deliberate in her manner of following, is just coming to realize that working for the national society is not only THE THING to do just now, but a very good thing, indeed, and the only way of reaching the destitute war sufferers, to say nothing of the warriors, themselves.

A meeting has been called for tomorrow by Mrs Frank V. Hammar to try to interest a number of women in some work for the Red Cross.

St. Louis women began to knit some time ago, but not as furiously as did the women of New York, who appeared at the Piping Rock Horse Show recently and sat knitting at intervals all during the show. There they take their knitting everywhere with them and proceed with their work on socks, cholera belts and other articles needed.

Knitting has seized the women and girls here and they are beginning to take their balls of ugly gray yarn about with them, becoming so expert in the almost lost art of knitting that they rival grandmother's work.

Miss Emilie Maffitt's appeal to St. Louis women, several weeks ago from New York, has started them and the fad, if fad it can be called, is spreading like mad.

Dependable Window Shades, made in St. Louis. Shade Co., 609 N. 13th. Olive 3486.

THE matinee concert of the Symphony Orchestra, Friday, the first this season, was a social as well as a musical event. The day was as balmy as spring and the dressing suggested Easter instead of November.

All boxes but three were filled, and it was the largest first afternoon audience in several years.

The audience at the matinees is made up mostly of women—dowagers, debutantes, school girls and music students.

Young matrons take their daughters to cultivate in them a love for good music; groups of fashionables drop in for the concert on the way from a luncheon, or to a tea. With some of the patrons it is the custom to give a luncheon, Symphony day, and take the guests on to the concert later. It is always a most interesting assemblage, like no other seen in St. Louis.

It is unnecessary to say anything about the orchestra. Under its able conductor it speaks for itself. Some things never receive full appreciation until they are no more. St. Louis now seems to have reawakened to the fineness of its orchestra, after coming so near to losing it, and the winter promises to be the best musically, socially and financially the Symphony has yet enjoyed.

FOR charity at home every organization is busy. First there is the big charity ball, which will be given at Dreamland, Nov. 17, and for which so many matrons and maids of the fashionable set are working.

The ball this year will be for the benefit of the St. Louis Protestant Orphans' Home, which in spite of its name, is virtually nonsectarian.

Then there is the campaign for funds carried on by the Y. W. C. A., and now comes the announcement of a big dance for the benefit of Father Dempsey's day nursery, which will be given Nov. 20 at Trimp's Academy. The afternoon will be especially for children and the evening for grown-ups.

Both the Day Nursery and dancing are so appealing there is every reason to believe the affair will be a huge success.

Big reductions on all my this season's Model Suits, Gowns and Waists. A. Schumack, Ladies' Tailor and Gownmaker, 856 Century Building.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN CALVIN ROBERTS will give an afternoon dance at the Woman's Club, Dec. 28, for the Princeton Triangle Club, which will appear at King's Theater the same evening in "Fi, Fi, Fifi," a musical comedy. Mr. and Mrs. Roberts' son, Elzey Roberts, is a member of the club. The debutantes of the season, who number about 25 girls, will be the guests.

MISS MILDRED STICKNEY, daughter of Mrs. William C. Stickney of 46 Westmoreland place, and Orion J. Willis were married quietly yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride, at 5 o'clock.

The bride is one of the charming girls in society as well as one of the most popular. She made her debut several seasons ago. She is a member of the Imperial set.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Frank Sneed, formerly pastor of the Compton and Washington Presbyterian Church, who came from Pittsburg for the purpose.

Miss Helen Morton was the only bridesmaid and Robert McCormick of Chicago was best man.

The bride wore a gown of white satin and tulle. Her veil was simply arranged with orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of Easter lilies.

She was given in marriage by her elder brother, Albert Taylor Stickney.

There were about 150 guests, limited to the family and nearest friends of the family.

Mr. Willis and his bride departed in the evening for their wedding trip, and

FAMOUS FOR HER HAIR

Actress Tells How to Obtain It.

Madame Rose, the well-known actress who played on one of the leading vaudeville circuits the past winter and who is especially noted for her long, beautiful hair in a recent interview in Chicago, made the following statement: "Any lady or gentleman can promote the growth of their hair and make it soft and glossy with this simple recipe which they can mix at home: To a half pint of water add 1 oz. of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼-oz. of glycerine. Apply to the scalp two or three times a week with the finger tips. This is not only the finest hair grower I have ever known, but it prevents the hair from falling out, removes dandruff and scalp humors, darkens streaked, faded gray hair and makes it soft and glossy. The ingredients can be purchased at any drug store at very little cost."—ADVERTISEMENT.

Makes Stubborn Coughs Vanish in a Hurry

Surprisingly Good Cough Syrup Easily and Cheaply Made at Home

If some one in your family has an obstinate cough or a bad throat or chest cold that has been hanging on and refuses to yield to treatment, get from any drug store 2½ ounces of Pinex and make it into a pint of cough syrup. The cough will vanish.

Pour the 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents, and gives you a full pint—a family supply—of a most effective remedy, at a saving of $2. A day's use will usually overcome a hard cough. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions with Pinex. Keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste. Children like it.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction goes with this preparation or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

TRY IT! SAYS SAGE TEA DARKENS AND BEAUTIFIES LIFELESS, GRAY HAIR

Sage Tea when Mixed with Sulphur makes the Hair Soft and Luxuriant and Removes Dandruff from the Scalp.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is coming in vogue again, says a well-known downtown druggist. It was our grandmother's treatment and hundreds of women and men, too, are again using it to keep their hair a good even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is the most popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply dampen a soft brush or sponge with "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur" and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. Do this tonight, and by morning the gray hair disappears and after another application it is restored to its natural color.

What delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that besides beautifully darkening the hair they say it produces that soft luster and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair. Here, you gray-haired folks, get busy! look years younger. —ADV.

THE University Club's annual dinner dance, which for many years has been one of the events of Thanksgiving week, will be given Dec. 1.

New hats for reception or street wear. Sally Meagher, 801 Century Building.

TWO engagements were added last week to the already long list of fall betrothals—that of Miss Helen Ittner to J. F. Auguste Lorber of New Orleans and New York and Miss Margaret Warfield to Charles C. Curry.

Miss Ittner is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William B. Ittner of 5553 Bartmer avenue. The announcement was made at a luncheon given Thursday by Mrs. Ittner. The marriage will be in midwinter.

The engagement of Miss Warfield and Mr. Curry was announced yesterday afternoon at a small tea which Miss Mildred Glover gave in honor of the bride-elect. The marriage will be the last of January. Miss Warfield is the daughter of Mrs. L. A. Warfield of 5151 Waterman avenue.

THERE is talk of making the first Imperial ball this year a Red Cross ball, that is, to have the simplest dance possible and give the difference between the cost of it and the cost of the usual elaborate affair to the Red Cross Society.

Everywhere, especially in the East, the most interesting kind of entertainments are being given for the benefit of the Red Cross, and St. Louis, rather deliberate in her manner of following, is just coming to realize that working for the national society is not only THE THING to do just now, but a very good thing, indeed, and the only way of reaching the destitute war sufferers, to say nothing of the warriors, themselves.

A meeting has been called for tomorrow by Mrs Frank V. Hammar to try to interest a number of women in some work for the Red Cross.

St. Louis women began to knit some time ago, but not as furiously as did the women of New York, who appeared at the Piping Rock Horse Show recently and sat knitting at intervals all during the show. There they take their knitting everywhere with them and proceed with their work on socks, cholera belts and other articles needed.

Knitting has seized the women and girls here and they are beginning to take their balls of ugly gray yarn about with them, becoming so expert in the almost lost art of knitting that they rival grandmother's work.

Miss Emilie Maffitt's appeal to St. Louis women, several weeks ago from New York, has started them and the fad, if fad it can be called, is spreading like mad.

Dependable Window Shades, made in St. Louis. Shade Co., 609 N. 13th. Olive 3486.

THE matinee concert of the Symphony Orchestra, Friday, the first this season, was a social as well as a musical event. The day was as balmy as spring and the dressing suggested Easter instead of November.

All boxes but three were filled, and it was the largest first afternoon audience in several years.

The audience at the matinees is made up mostly of women—dowagers, debutantes, school girls and music students.

Young matrons take their daughters to cultivate in them a love for good music; groups of fashionables drop in for the concert on the way from a luncheon, or to a tea. With some of the patrons it is the custom to give a luncheon, Symphony day, and take the guests on to the concert later. It is always a most interesting assemblage, like no other seen in St. Louis.

It is unnecessary to say anything about the orchestra. Under its able conductor it speaks for itself. Some things never receive full appreciation until they are no more. St. Louis now seems to have reawakened to the fineness of its orchestra, after coming so near to losing it, and the winter promises to be the best musically, socially and financially the Symphony has yet enjoyed.

FOR charity at home every organization is busy. First there is the big charity ball, which will be given at Dreamland, Nov. 17, and for which so many matrons and maids of the fashionable set are working.

The ball this year will be for the benefit of the St. Louis Protestant Orphans' Home, which in spite of its name, is virtually nonsectarian.

Then there is the campaign for funds carried on by the Y. W. C. A., and now comes the announcement of a big dance for the benefit of Father Dempsey's day nursery, which will be given Nov. 20 at Trimp's Academy. The afternoon will be especially for children and the evening for grown-ups.

Both the Day Nursery and dancing are so appealing there is every reason to believe the affair will be a huge success.

Big reductions on all my this season's Model Suits, Gowns and Waists. A. Schumack, Ladies' Tailor and Gownmaker, 856 Century Building.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN CALVIN ROBERTS will give an afternoon dance at the Woman's Club, Dec. 28, for the Princeton Triangle Club, which will appear at King's Theater the same evening in "Fi, Fi, Fifi," a musical comedy. Mr. and Mrs. Roberts' son, Elzey Roberts, is a member of the club. The debutantes of the season, who number about 25 girls, will be the guests.

MISS MILDRED STICKNEY, daughter of Mrs. William C. Stickney of 46 Westmoreland place, and Orion J. Willis were married quietly yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride, at 5 o'clock.

The bride is one of the charming girls in society as well as one of the most popular. She made her debut several seasons ago. She is a member of the Imperial set.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Frank Sneed, formerly pastor of the Compton and Washington Presbyterian Church, who came from Pittsburg for the purpose.

Miss Helen Morton was the only bridesmaid and Robert McCormick of Chicago was best man.

She was given in marriage by her elder brother, Albert Taylor Stickney.

There were about 150 guests, limited to the family and nearest friends of the family.

Mr. Willis and his bride departed in the evening for their wedding trip, and

FAMOUS FOR HER HAIR

Actress Tells How to Obtain It.

Madame Rose, the well-known actress who played on one of the leading vaudeville circuits the past winter and who is especially noted for her long, beautiful hair in a recent interview in Chicago, made the following statement: "Any lady or gentleman can promote the growth of their hair and make it soft and glossy with this simple recipe which they can mix at home: To a half pint of water add 1 oz. of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼-oz. of glycerine. Apply to the scalp two or three times a week with the finger tips. This is not only the finest hair grower I have ever known, but it prevents the hair from falling out, removes dandruff and scalp humors, darkens streaked, faded gray hair and makes it soft and glossy. The ingredients can be purchased at any drug store at very little cost."—ADVERTISEMENT.

Makes Stubborn Coughs Vanish in a Hurry

Surprisingly Good Cough Syrup Easily and Cheaply Made at Home

If some one in your family has an obstinate cough or a bad throat or chest cold that has been hanging on and refuses to yield to treatment, get from any drug store 2½ ounces of Pinex and make it into a pint of cough syrup. The cough will vanish.

Pour the 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents, and gives you a full pint—a family supply—of a most effective remedy, at a saving of $2. A day's use will usually overcome a hard cough. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions with Pinex. Keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste. Children like it.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction goes with this preparation or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

TRY IT! SAYS SAGE TEA DARKENS AND BEAUTIFIES LIFELESS, GRAY HAIR

Sage Tea when Mixed with Sulphur makes the Hair Soft and Luxuriant and Removes Dandruff from the Scalp.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is coming in vogue again, says a well-known downtown druggist. It was our grandmother's treatment and hundreds of women and men, too, are again using it to keep their hair a good even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is the most popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply dampen a soft brush or sponge with "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur" and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. Do this tonight, and by morning the gray hair disappears and after another application it is restored to its natural color.

What delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that besides beautifully darkening the hair they say it produces that soft luster and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair. Here, you gray-haired folks, get busy! look years younger.—ADV.

ITCHED AND BURNED WITH IVY POISON

Arms Swelled. Very Painful. Couldn't Do Any Work and Lost Much Sleep. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Healed in a Week.

346 Chapin St., Toledo, Ohio.—"My trouble started one day when I got poisoned by ivy. My arms swelled up and were very painful. They broke out with a sort of a rash, itched and burned and I had to keep my arms all tied up to keep from scratching them. I had to keep something soft on them so as not to irritate them. I couldn't do any work and I lost much sleep.

"I had treatments and they seemed to make it worse, so I dropped them and used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Every morning I washed my arms with Cuticura Soap and then applied the Cuticura Ointment. At the end of a week I was cured." (Signed) Mrs. C. Schroder, Apr. 7, 1914.

Ladies' Hairdressing in London and Paris

A returned traveler says: "When I was in Europe this year I found both cities so thickly dotted with hairdressing parlors and hair goods stores that I wondered if the women ever had time for anything but care of the hair. Personally I was interested in finding a really good shampoo and was happily surprised when several inquiries each brought the suggestion that our own American-made canthrox shampoo is best. I tried it and have decided that it is not advisable to use a makeshift but always use a preparation made for shampooing only. You can enjoy the best that is known for about three cents a shampoo by getting a package of canthrox from your druggist; dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water and your shampoo is ready. After its use the hair dries rapidly with uniform color. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its luster and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth."—ADV.

Acute Articular Rheumatism

The exact cause of rheumatism is unknown, though it is generally believed to be due to an excess of uric acid in the blood. It may be also said with equal truth that no remedy has been found which is a specific in all cases. In fact the literature of rheumatism shows that there are but few drugs which have not been given a trial. In the hands of one observer we find that a certain drug has been used with the utmost satisfaction; others have found the same remedy to be a great disappointment. All physicians, however, agree that every method of treatment is aided by the administration of some remedy to relieve the pain and quiet the nervous system, and Dr. W. S. Schultze expresses the opinion of thousands of practitioners when he says that Anti-Kamnia Tablets should be given preference over all other remedies for the relief of the pain in all forms of rheumatism. These tablets can be purchased in any quantity. They are also unsurpassed in headaches, neuralgias and all pain. Ask for A-K Tablets.—ADV.

Stock Reducing Sale

THE unseasonable weather of the past month has been decidedly unfavorable to the sale of heavier outer apparel, as a result of which stocks are considerably heavier than normal. To meet the condition promptly & in order to bring various lines to where they should be, we have gone through them with the blue pencil & made such unhesitating reductions as are calculated to quickly bring about the desired changes.

Price revisions are sweeping & far-reaching. New arrivals of smartest apparel have fallen prey to the ruthless price cutting, so that Monday marks the beginning of the most extraordinary selling of the season. Women with a regard for economy will be here in full force to benefit by this great stock reducing occasion.

Wrinkles Disappear As if by Magic

"In the removal of wrinkles, I have discarded cosmetics entirely," writes Mme. Corsan, the celebrated Parisian beauty expert. "The results they produce are deceptive and never permanent. Massaging is only partially successful and it's too slow a method.

"I've never seen anything work such wonders as a simple, harmless solution any woman can prepare and use at home without the least trouble. A half-pint of witch hazel and an ounce of good powdered saxolite are all you'll need. Mix the two and apply this refreshing solution to your face daily. The effect is marvelous—instantaneous. The skin becomes firmer, 'tighter'—every wrinkle and sag is affected. You feel so refreshed after using the wash; you look refreshed, too; soon you will look ten years younger."—Society World.—ADV.

Love, Hair and Marriage

From the beginning of romantic history down to the present day, every story of love has spoken of the maiden's hair as one of her chief charms. Fair locks amply pay for the care and time used in keeping them beautiful, and care is all that is necessary for developing and retaining hair beauty. In washing the hair it is not advisable to use a makeshift, but always use a preparation made for shampooing only. You can enjoy the best that is known for about three cents a shampoo by getting a package of canthrox from your druggist; dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water and your shampoo is ready. After its use the hair dries rapidly with uniform color. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its luster and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth. —ADV.

Advice on Beauty
by Claire Ainsworth

NOTE—If the reader does not find the information wanted in the questions answered below, just address a letter to Miss Claire Ainsworth, 40 Patterson Bldg., Dayton, Ohio, inclosing self-addressed stamped envelope, and she will gladly advise on health and beauty problems. The articles and preparations mentioned are on sale by all wholesale druggists, large retail and department stores; or any accommodating dealer can obtain them for you.

Letters which I daily receive from girls and women indicate that my advice is appreciated and really wonderful transformations are made by the creams, emollients and toilet necessities which I have recommended. Many who have been indifferent are beginning to see the wisdom of aiding nature and caring for the skin and hair. It is a duty every woman owes to herself—to keep young and beautiful.

Millicent asks: "I am 18 years old and healthy, but my face, hands and arms are anything but pretty. My skin is dark, sallow and unhealthy looking. What shall I do?"

Answer: I will answer in such a manner that others may benefit by my advice. First, discontinue using toilet soap to cleanse face and hands. Use a saponified vegetable oil called gloriol glowene, obtainable in sealed tubes. Use it as a "water massage," and you will be gratified by its wonderful cleansing and softening effect on the skin. Each night before retiring use the "water massage" and follow it with a thorough patting and rotary massage, using gloriol emollient, which is a skin and flesh food unequaled for producing beautiful plumpness and color. Apply on face, hands and arms, according to directions which accompany each jar.

The morning toilet should be made by bathing the eyes only with cold water. Then apply the vanishing gloriol balm and again massage until it is all absorbed. This is very fragrant, cooling and pleasant to use, and a fresh application should be made at any time before going out into the weather. Gloriol powder may be used lightly to deaden the shine, if any.

The foregoing is a scientific treatment which will in a short time transform an ordinary face into one of beauty—beauty of color, beauty of plumpness and beauty of health.

Mrs. T. B. writes: "I wish you would be kind enough to give me the formula for a good home-made hair tonic. I am losing my hair and it looks dull. My scalp itches all the time."

Answer: Simply get one-half ounce hairwand powder in a sealed package. Empty into a pint bottle. Fill the bottle with soft, pure water, shake well and apply with the tips of the fingers, thoroughly massaging the scalp. Avoid anything containing alcohol.

Alice M. asks: "Do you think it safe to take something to reduce obesity? If so, what is best to use?"

Answer: Very beneficial results are obtained by many of my friends, who have used five-grain phythyrin tablets, which are sold by most pharmacies in sealed tubes. Physicians of my acquaintance commend these tablets, and I believe them to be the best reduction remedy extant.

Madame X asks: "Please recommend something to take off or destroy superfluous hair. I have a small patch on my chin and it is very embarrassing."

Answer: I advise you to obtain a sealed vial of fluvol powder. It is harmless, and full directions come with it. It acts instantly, and destroys the hair without harming the skin.

C. W. D. writes: "I am vain enough to want to improve my appearance by filling out the hollows in my neck and shoulders. Also would appreciate advice on how to round the bust and arms."

Answer: A regular massage with medicated venosol, each night according to directions, which are to be found in each tube, will soon fill the hollow places and round out the bust and arms to normal. Use the patting and rotary massage movements. Many actresses and society women indorse this treatment.

Dora asks: "How can one rid the face of redness, spots, pimples and large pores? Sometimes the pimples are quite large."

Answer: The best and surest method is to treat the blood for its impurities by taking one-grain tablets quinoxide, which may be obtained at most any well-stocked pharmacy. These tablets have a purifying and whitening effect on the skin, and are perfectly safe to use according to directions in each tube.

Mrs. B. B. asks: "What can I do to keep my hair up? In spite of my care, it comes down in short, ugly strands all about my face and neck."

Answer: Try using gloriol wavolene. I use it regularly, as do many of my correspondents. It keeps the hair in curl or wave for days at a time, and is said by many to promote a natural curl and wave if repeatedly used.

Geo. D. asks: "My wife and I are afflicted with dandruff, itching scalp and falling out of hair. We have tried various remedies in vain. Will you kindly tell us what to use?"

Answer: Use plain yellow minyol to massage the scalp once or twice a week, and in less than a month you should have no more trouble. To prevent a return use the hairwand tonic advised for "Mrs. T. B." in these columns.

Mrs. O. C. T. asks: "Tell me, please, what is the best soap for shampooing the hair?"

Answer: I do not advise either "soap or eggs," as they are neither fit to wash the hair if you value its health and luster. Gloriol liquid shampoo is by far the best shampoo that one can use. It is a treat to use it.

Miss Leila B. asks: "I am using the balm and emollient and I think they are perfect. What face powder should one use?"

Answer: Of all face powders I have used I like the gloriol because of its refined purity and odor of lilac. Send two stamps for my booklet, "Beauty Truths." All my readers are invited to send for it.

Miss P. C. C. asks: "What can I do to increase my weight about 15 or 20 pounds?"

Answer: To increase the weight take three-grain hypo-nuclane tablets to increase assimilation and nourishment. This is the most successful remedy for the purpose that has ever been discovered.

Bethel Church Anniversary.

The Bethel Evangelical Church, Greer and Garrison avenues, will celebrate its thirteenth anniversary Sunday, Nov. 15, with special services and music, at 10:45 a. m., and a special musical program at 7:45 p. m.

MAKES THE HAIR FLUFFY, LUSTROUS AND BEAUTIFUL IN A FEW MOMENTS

Girls! Get a 25 cent bottle of "Danderine" and try this. Also stops falling hair and scalp itch; destroys dandruff.

Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and beautiful as a young girl's after a "Danderine hair cleanse." Just try this—moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt and excessive oil and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair.

Besides beautifying the hair at once, Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair.

But what will please you most will be after a few week's use when you will actually see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair and lots of it surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any druggist or toilet counter, and just try it.—ADV.

"Under-Fire" Yarns Told to Davis by Officers of Allies

banker, bue he said he would first try elsewhere. The next day I met him on the boulevards and asked what kind of a riotous existence he found possible on 5 francs.

Lucky Brother Was Shot.

"I've had the most extraordinary luck," he said. "After I met you, I met my brother. He was just in from the front and I got all his money."

"Won't your brother need it?" I asked.

"Not at all," said the subaltern cheerfully. "He's shot in the legs, and they've put him to bed. Rotten luck for him, you might say, but how lucky for me!"

Had he been the brother who was shot in both legs he would have treated the matter just as light-heartedly.

The stories the English officers told us at La Rue's and Maxim's, by contrast with the surroundings, were all the more grewsome. Seeing them there, it did not seem possible that in a few hours these same fit, sun-tanned youths in khaki would be back in the trenches, or scouting in advance of them, or that only the day before they had been dodging death and destroying their fellowmen.

Maxim's, which now reminds one only of the last act of the "Merry Widow," was the meeting place for the French and English officers from the front, the American military attaches from our embassy, soldiers, sailors, aviators, marines, the doctors and volunteer nurses from the America ambulance and the correspondents who by night dined in Paris and by day dodged arrest and other things on the firing line, or as near it as they could motor without going to jail. For these Maxim's was the clearing house for news of friends and battles.

Ancient Foes Dine Together.

Where once were the supper girls and the ladies of the gold mesh vanity bags, were only men in red and blue uniforms, men in khaki, men in bandages. Among them were English Lords and French Princes, with titles that dated from Agincourt to Waterloo where their ancestors had met as enemies. Now those who have succeeded them as allies were, oversole Marguery, discussing airships, armored automobiles and mitrailleuse.

At one table Hugo Frazier of the American Embassy would be telling an English officer that a Captain of his regiment who was supposed to have been killed at Coutrai, had, like a homing pigeon, found his way to the hospital at Neuilly and wanted to be reported "safe" at Lloyds. At another table a French Lieutenant would describe a raid made by the son of an American banker in Paris who is in command of an armed automobile. "He swept his gun only once—so," the Frenchman explained, waving his arm across the champagne and the broiled lobster, "and he caught a General and two staff officers. He cut them in half."

Dead in the Way.

Or at another table you would listen to a group of English officers talking in wonder of the German's wasteful advance in solid formation.

"They were piled so high," one of them relates, "that I stopped firing. They looked like grey worms squirming about in a bait box. I can shoot men coming at me on their feet, but not a mass of arms and legs."

"I know," asserts another, "when we charged the other day we had to advance over the Germans that fell the night before, and my men were slipping and stumbling all over the place. The bodies didn't give them any foothold."

Then another takes up the tale. "My Sergeant yesterday," he relates, "turned to me and said: 'It isn't cricket. There's no game in shooting into a target as big as that. It's just murder.' I had to order him to continue firing."

They tell of it without pose or emotion. It is all in the day's work. Most of them are young men of wealth, of ancient family, cleanly bred gentlemen of England, and, as they nod and leave the restaurant, we know that in three hours, wrapped in a great coat, each will be sleeping in the earth trenches and that the next morning the shells will wake him.

The Doctor's Advice

by Dr. Lewis Baker

Miss O. M. asks: "I have pimples, oily skin, and suffer from constipation, headache, and never feel strong and well please prescribe for me."

Answer: You should overcome constipation and cleanse the system of accumulated poisons by taking three grain sulpherb tablets (not sulphur) for several weeks or more. These tablets are very beneficial, especially in hot weather, as they have a tendency to cool the blood and improve its quality.

"Poorly" writes: "Being past middle age and observing that my nervous system is in bad shape, I write for a prescription. I do not gain strength from my food, am weak, listless, forgetful, sleepless at times, tired, and unable to act the part of a strong man of health, such as I was at one time."

Answer: Get from a well-stocked pharmacy a sealed tube of 3-grain cadomene tablets, which are especially made for those needing a strong, harmless, rejuvenating tonic. Astonishing and pleasing results follow and life and hope are renewed.

"A Fat Woman" asks: "Would you please prescribe a safe reducing remedy for too much fat?"

Answer: At this season many fat people suffer greatly from the heat as you do, and to all I recommend that they reduce with 5-grain arbolene tablets, the most successful and convenient prescription I know of. Druggists supply in sealed tubes with full directions.

The questions answered below are general in character, the symptoms or diseases are given and the answers will apply in any case of similar nature.

Those wishing further advice, free may address Dr. Lewis Baker, College Bldg., College-Ellwood sts., Dayton, O., enclosing self-addressed stamped envelope for reply. Full name and address must be given, but only initials or fictitious name will be used in my answers. The prescriptions can be filled at any well-stocked drug store. Any druggist can order of wholesaler.

Miss C. W. R. asks: "I have tried for two years to diet so as to increase my weight and improve the quality of my blood, but in vain. Please prescribe for me?"

Answer: Thin, scrawny bloodless people need assistance in absorbing nutrition from the food eaten, and for this particular purpose I always prescribe three-grain hypo-nuclane tablets, a most effective preparation if regularly and persistently used, as it seems to increase the red and white corpuscles of the blood thus affording health strength and increased weight.

M. J. B. asks: "My hair is too oily and my scalp itches with dandruff and of late is combing out too much. What is a good treatment?"

Answer: Obtain plain yellow minyol from your druggist in 4 oz. jars and apply as per directions. This cleans, purifies, cools and invigorates the hair and scalp, thus stopping the death of the hair. Dandruff and itching are at once relieved. Men and women all over the country now use it regularly.

"Essex" writes: "What should I do to relieve a severe case of kidney and bladder disease? Have fever, chills, pains like rheumatism, and soreness in region of bladder."

Answer: For such symptoms as you describe, I prescribe my favorite formula under the name of balmwort tablets. This is a splendidly efficacious remedy for such abnormal conditions. Begin their use at once as per directions on each sealed tube.—ADVERTISEMENT.

Fortnight of Worthy Opera at Popular Prices Now Opens

San Carlo Opera Season Opens Tomorrow Evening With "Rigoletto," Finely Cast, as First Offering

Florencio Constantino Appears as the Duke, Angelo Antola in Title Role, Mme. Vaccari as Gilda and Mme. Zawner as Maddalena—Mme. Gerville-Reache as "Carmen" Opens Next Week's Repertoire — Effective Alignment of Principals Throughout Engagement.

By RIPLEY D. SAUNDERS.

WITH the opening of the San Carlo Opera Company's two-weeks' engagement at the Odeon tomorrow evening, under the auspices of the St. Louis Grand Opera Committee, a very interesting submittal of proof that worthy opera can be presented at moderate prices then will be instituted.

The known facts in the case as it now stands justify a confident belief that the San Carlo singers, fully and convincingly, will confirm the claims of artistic excellence made in their behalf. They proved their high quality, in fact, during their Olympic engagement last season. All the performances then given were satisfying, and certain works in their repertoire were so admirably presented as to become sincerely and exceptionally memorable. The organization now has a stronger array of principals than then was possessed and, in addition, two "guest" stars of the first magnitude—Florencio Constantino and Jeanne Gerville-Reache—are to be heard in roles that have gained for them much of the distinction which they enjoy. Impresario Fortune Gallo also promises a thoroughly efficient grand opera orchestra, under the able conductorship of Giuseppe Angelini, and a chorus vocally competent and sufficient in number to attain the best results in massed tonal volume.

According to critical authorities of the Eastern cities in which the San Carlo company has sung this season the organization "offers $5 opera at $2 prices." This is a big claim, but, remembering the San Carlo achievements at the Olympic last year, also the fact of the company's present superior personnel, I shall not be surprised if the engagement now about to begin shall develop the claim into accomplished fact here in St. Louis as already seems to have been done elsewhere.

Constantino, who has not suffered by that comparison with Caruso which his admirers insist upon in all sincerity, will be heard tomorrow evening as the Duke of Mantua in Verdi's "Rigoletto," a role in which he has scored one of his greatest successes.

In this part Constantino's noble tenor stirringly robust and virile, yet capable of the tenderest emotional utterance, is revealed at its best. The demand of the "Rigoletto" score upon the singer of this role is well-nigh merciless in its certainty of exposure and chagrin in the event of vocal incompetency, even in the slightest degree. The tenor essaying it must needs be richly endowed as to voice, especially in the upper register, if he hopes to emerge with anything like credit to himself. And, also, his sense of drama must be acute and his stage presence uncommonly attractive to warrant his attempting the part. Constantino meets these several demands to the fullest.

On Friday evening of this week Constantino is to sing the role of Rhadames in "Aida," and it will be remembered that he won a memorable St. Louis triumph in this part during the engagement of the Boston Opera Co. at the Olympic several years ago. The Rhadames score convincingly reveals the uncommonly masculine quality of the Constantino voice while giving, at certain moments, peculiar opportunity for a demonstration of its tenderness and emotional appeal. The dramatic demand of this martial role calls for genuine power as an actor and its physical requirements are such that it may be regarded, perhaps, as the most surely rewardful characterization in Constantino's entire repertoire.

It is as Rhadames, most of all, his enthusiastic following contends, that Constantino stands squarely abreast of Caruso in his completed achievement as a great dramatic tenor.

Mme. Jeanne Gerville-Reache, the great dramatic contralto, will be the distinguished "guest" star in the Monday evening performance of the second week of the San Carlo season, appearing in the title role of "Carmen," which she has interpreted with brilliant success in this country and abroad.

To those St. Louisans who heard her as Brangaene in the Philadelphia-Chicago Opera Company's impressive performance of "Tristan and Isolde" at the Coliseum several years ago, the appellation of "the singing Duse," said to have been won by Mme. Gerville-Reache in Europe, will seem well deserved. She is undeniably an actress of extraordinary power, certain in stroke, well-trained and effectively [illegible], and with a keen instinct for dramatic values. As a singer she is richly endowed, her voice possessing an emotional quality of moving eloquence, so truthfully utilized as to acutely emphasize the appeal of her work in drama. She should prove a memorable Carmen, and I am disposed to believe that, under her treatment, the wayward and ill-starred Bizet heroine will develop into a figure unforgetable in poignant tragedy. If, at the same time, she can impart to the role that earlier vivid aspect of passionate coquetry, of hot-blooded recklessness in the indulgence of her loves, that was so vital in the Carmen of Calve's picturing some 20 years ago, we are destined to see a very great creation indeed.

Mme. Gerville-Reache also is to be heard as Azucena in "Il Trovatore," this being the San Carlo offering on Friday evening of the season's second week. It is announced that she now is conceded to be the greatest Azucena on the world's stage of today. This definite claim seems to warrant the building of high hopes with regard to the San Carlo presentation of what is perhaps the best loved—and assuredly the most frequently produced—of all the Verdi operas.

In "La Traviata," on Thursday evening of this week and Wednesday afternoon of next, the title role will be sung by Mme. Regina Vicarino, another newcomer, a coloratura soprano concerning whose Violetta, it is announced, the consensus of critical opinion is that it now stands unsurpassed in the field of florid vocalization where so many famous prima donna triumphs have been scored in past years. Mme. Vicarino also will sing Marguerite in "Faust" at the Lindell Theater on Saturday evening, under the auspices of the North St. Louis Business Men's Association.

Mme. Edvige Vaccari, heralded as "the second Tetrazzini," for two seasons leading prima donna of the National Grand Opera Company in Mexico City, will be heard as Gilda in tomorrow night's "Rigoletto," as Rosina in "The Barber of Seville" at Thursday's matinee, as Olympia and Antonia in next Saturday afternoon's performance of "Tales of Hoffman," as Micaela in "Carmen" on Monday night of next week, the title role in "Lucia" on Wednesday evening, and Lady Harriet in the following Saturday matinee presentation of "Martha."

Mme. Ester Adaberto, dramatic soprano, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, and the Covent Garden Opera, London, makes her first appearance next Wednesday evening as Santuzza in "Cavalleria Rusticana," also as Nedda in "Pagliacci," which completes the double bill announced for that night. On Friday evening she sings the title role in "Aida," on Tuesday evening of next week she appears as Amelia in "The Masked Ball," and on Friday evening as Leonora in "Il Trovatore."

Mme. Carolina Zawner, the Russian contralto, will be heard as Maddalena in "Rigoletto" tomorrow evening, as Amneris in "Aida" on Friday evening, as Ulrica in "The Masked Ball" on Tuesday evening of next week, and as Nancy in "Martha" at the Saturday matinee.

Mme. Amelia Sedelmayer, dramatic soprano, will be heard as Lucia in "Cavalleria Rusticana" on Wednesday evening, as Marcellina in "The Barber of Seville" at Thursday's matinee, as Flora in "La Traviata" on Thursday evening and at next week's Wednesday's matinee, as Frasquita in "Carmen" on Monday evening of next week, as Alice in "Lucia" on Wednesday evening and as Inez in "Il Trovatore" on Friday evening.

Mme. Marie Kaestner, a German prima donna of distinction, will be heard as Julietta in "Tales of Hoffman" at next Saturday's matinee.

Miss Stella de Mette, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York, a St. Louis girl, will sing the role of Lola in "Cavalleria Rusticana" next Wednesday evening.

Baritone Angelo Antola, who has a great St. Louis following, is to appear in the title role of "Rigoletto" tomorrow night, as Alfio in "Cavalleria Rusticana" and as Tonio in "Pagliacci" on Wednesday evening, as Figaro in "The Barber of Seville" at Thursday's matinee, as Amonasro in "Aida" on Friday evening, as Coppelius, Dappeterte and Miracle in "Tales of Hoffman" at Saturday's matinee, as Escamillo in "Carmen" on Monday evening of next week, as Sir Henry Ashton in "Lucia" on Wednesday evening, and as Plunkett in "Martha" at the Saturday matinee.

Baritone Modesti, also a prime St. Louis favorite, will be heard as Giorgio Germont in "La Traviata" next Thursday evening and at next week's Wednesday matinee, as Reinhart in "The Masked Ball" on Tuesday evening of next week, and as the Count di Luna in "Il Trovatore" on the Friday evening following.

Tenor Salvatore Sciaretti, who has scored notable triumphs in Eastern cities this season, will appear as Count Almaviva in "The Barber of Seville" at next Thursday's matinee; in the title role of "Tales of Hoffman" at Saturday's matinee, in the title role of "Faust" at the Lindell Theater on Saturday evening, as Edgar of Ravenswood in "Lucia" on Wednesday evening of next week and as Lionel in "Martha" at the Saturday matinee.

Tenor Giuseppe Agostini will be heard as Turiddu in "Cavalleria Rusticana" next Wednesday evening, as Alfredo Germont in "La Traviata" next Thursday evening and at next week's Wednesday matinee, and as Don Jose in "Carmen" on Monday evening of next week.

Tenor Fausto Castelani will be heard as Canio in "Pagliacci" next Wednesday night, as Richard in "The Masked Ball" on Tuesday evening of next week, and as Manrico in "Il Trovatore" on Friday evening.

Basso Pietro Sesona is cast as Sparafucile in "Rigoletto" tomorrow evening, as Basilio in "The Barber of Seville" at Thursday's matinee, as Ramfis in "Aida" on Friday evening, as Mephistopheles in "Faust" at the Lindell Theater on Saturday evening, as Zuniga in "Carmen" on Monday evening of next week, as Samuel in "The Masked Ball" on Tuesday evening, as Raymond in "Lucia" on Wednesday evening, and as Ferrando in "Il Trovatore" on Friday evening.

Basso Natale Cervi will appear as Count Monterone in "Rigoletto" tomorrow evening, as Bartolo in "The Barber of Seville" at Thursday's matinee, as Dr. Grenvil in "La Traviata" next Thursday evening and at the Wednesday matinee next week, as the King of Egypt in "Aida" on Friday evening, as Crespel in "Tales of Hoffman" at Saturday's matinee, as Dancairo in "Carmen" on Monday evening of next week, and as Sir Tristan in "Martha" at Saturday's matinee.

Baritone Dellemolle, one of this season's newcomers, appears as Silvio in "Pagilacci" next Wednesday evening, as Baron Douphol in "La Traviata" on Thursday evening, and at next week's Wednesday matinee, as Spalancani in "Tales of Hoffman" at next Saturday's matinee, and as Morales in "Carmen" on Monday evening of next week.

SIMPLE WAY TO END DANDRUFF

Stop Falling Hair and Itching Scalp

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring, use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve, and entirely destroy, every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

If you value your hair, you should get rid of dandruff at once, for nothing destroys the hair so quickly. It not only starves the hair and makes it fall out, but it makes it stringy, straggly, dull, dry, brittle and lifeless, and everybody notices it.—ADV.

What Leads to Tuberculosis?

IN THE opinion of many medical authorities, the development of pulmonary tuberculosis (consumption) is hastened, if not actually precipitated, by a loss of lime from the system. This condition technically is known as decalcification, and nearly all authorities agree that it must be avoided in order to preserve health.

"Where there is decalcification, the lime salts must be supplied medicinally," says Dr. J. W. Carhart, of San Antonio, Texas, in the May, 1913, issue of "Medical Progress," an ethical journal, published in Louisville.

To supply these vitally necessary salts has, in many instances, proved a difficult matter, since in some forms they are not easily assimilable, and often cause stomach disturbance.

In Eckman's Alterative, however, calcium (lime) is so combined with other remedial agents as to be assimilated by the average person without discomfort or digestive disturbance, and to this, in part, is due the success of this remedy in the treatment of tuberculosis and allied chronic throat and bronchial affections.

We make no boastful claims for Eckman's Alterative, but a careful record of results obtained during years of widespread use warrants the assertion that many such cases apparently have yielded to it, while many others have been relieved or benefited.

It contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, hence its use is not attended with danger. Your druggist has it or will order it, or you can send direct.

THE KING OF ALL—
SOUND REPRODUCING INSTRUMENTS

EDISON
Diamond Disc

The king on his throne is not as proud as the owner of an Edison Diamond-Disc Phonograph!

This musical instrument can be heard at the SILVERSTONE MUSIC CO.'S Parlors, at 1124 Olive Street. Concert Hall and Demonstration Booths on first floor.

THE EDISON represents new developments and wonderful improvements, which has revolutionized the entire situation in sound-reproduction.

THE EDISON reproduces every musical instrument so perfectly that your mind's eye sees them before you, and you exclaim, "It is the King of all musical instruments!"

THE EDISON develops a "musical culture which no other sound-reproducing machine affords, because all overtures, symphonies and orchestral selections are reproduced as written by the composer, with perfect tempo and proper phrasing."

THE EDISON brings out the mellowness of music—the overtones or tone colors—which produces a full round tone, natural, and almost human; other sound-reproducing devices lack the overtones, therefore their tones sound artificial.

We, the Silverstone Company, as experts, claim the Edison Diamond-Disc is vastly superior to any other well-advertised make. We make this statement unqualifiedly. You will regret if you do not hear the Edison Diamond-Disc before purchasing.

You are invited to attend our hourly informal concerts given in Edison Hall.

EXCLUSIVELY EDISON.

Forbes-Robertson Now to Appear on St. Louis Stage for Last Time

Distinguished Actor's Farewell Engagement Opens With "Hamlet" at Shubert Theater Tomorrow Evening—"Seven Keys to Baldpate" at Olympic—Other St. Louis Playbills.

FORBES-ROBERTSON in repertoire. Shubert. Farewell engagement of distinguished English actor who now, at 62, announces his retirement from the stage, upon which he nobly has served the art of drama for 40 years.

The Forbes-Robertson "Hamlet" to be presented on Monday evening and at Saturday's matinee, is regarded as the greatest interpretation of that role in the modern theater. The Dick Heldar of this actor's playing in "The Light That Failed," which will be given on Tuesday and Wednesday nights, has been called by a leading New York critic "the greatest exhibition of acting in the history of the stage." In the sincerely benignant role of The Passer-by in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," to be seen Wednesday afternoon and Saturday night, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson has won the tender love of American players from coast to coast. And the nobility, humanness and keen humor of his Caesar in Bernard Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra," to be played on Thursday and Friday nights, makes this character one of the most effective in his repertoire.

Miss Laura Cowie, never before seen in St. Louis, heads the supporting company, which is the same that has played with Forbes-Robertson for the past two seasons.

Next week, Grace George in "The Truth," Clyde Fitch's cleverest comedy.

"SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE." Olympic. George M. Cohan's dramatization of successful novel of the same title. Ran at the Gaiety Theater in New York for one year and at Cohan's Opera House in Chicago for six months. A new type of play, largely developed by Cohan, blending tragedy, melodrama, comedy and farce.

The piece is rich in thrills and abounds with laugh-provoking situations, terminating in a smashing surprise that takes the form of a huge joke on the audience. It is constructed with the serious purpose of causing as many thrills as possible—and then the audience is invited to laugh at every thrill as soon as it has been experienced. All the stock tricks of melodrama are made to seem plausible until the moment for laughter comes. The quickly changing moods of the play keep the audience absorbed and vastly entertained from start to finish.

Next week, "The Yellow Ticket," a drama by Michael Morton, which scored a long run at the Eltinge Theater in New York City.

"THE BLINDNESS OF VIRTUE." American. Cosmo Hamilton's strong play, voicing a preachment of the perilous folly of permitting children to grow up in ignorance of certain impulses and conditions. Presented by an English company making a brief American tour. Was produced in New York last season.

The play's story concerns the love affair of the daughter of an English vicar and a young man, dismissed from both Eton and Oxford for his pranks, whose parents have sent him down to study with the vicar in the faint hope that his waywardness may be cured. The girl, in utter innocence, places herself in a compromising situation with this young man and the latter is wrongfully accused by her father. The story's action then proceeds to convince the vicar and his wife that the blame for their daughter's danger rests upon them.

The play is said to contain much brilliant comedy.

"GRAUSTARK." Park. Dramatic version of George Barr McCutcheon's dashing romantic drama, its scenes laid in a mythical Balkan principality. The Players are well cast for this, their most ambitious venture of the season thus far. Mitchell Harris and Marion Ruckert have the leading roles. John Maurice Sullivan and Eda von Buelow will be seen in good "heavy" parts. Others appearing prominently are Henry Hull, Elsa Rendel, Robert McClung, Carson Davenport, Anna Berger Price, Leonora Bradley and Louis Calhern.

"THE FAIR CO-ED." Shenandoah. Clever and melodious musical comedy, excellently presented by the Park Opera Company. Roger Gray scores a big hit with his singing of "It's a Long Way to Tipperary," the famous song of the British soldiers now fighting in France and Belgium. Mabel Wilber appears in the Elsie Janis title role, and other favorites of the company are advantageously placed.

VAUDEVILLE. Grand. Bill headed by Jesse L. Lasky's "California," a picturesquely colorful operetta.

VAUDEVILLE. Hippodrome. Bill headed by Torcat, the French comedian; his wife, Flora d'Aliza, and their trained birds.

BIG DREAMLAND CO. Princess. Andy Lewis heads the organization as chief fun-maker. Bright and tuneful musical extravaganza. Special vaudeville features, of which the Alpine Four is the topliner.

"FOLLIES OF PLEASURE." Standard. Jack McCabe, Tom McKenna, Clyde J. Bates and Sam Lewis are the leading comedians. Will present two new musical comedies entitled "The Girl from Broadway," and "The Hotel Cabaret," also vaudeville, with "The Girl in Red" as an added feature.

"BLACK CROOK JR." Gayety. Will present a two-act burlesque entitled "The Grafters," with Joe McGee and Jack Reid as chief comedians. Entertaining bill of vaudeville specialties.

The Post-Dispatch is the only evening newspaper in St. Louis that receives or publishes news gathered by the Associated Press.

With his Travelogue entitled "The Allied Powers" Burton Holmes, at the Odeon next Tuesday night, will close the most successful season he has ever known in St. Louis.

The pictures will range from Petrograd to Paris, from Antwerp to Cettinje, and from London to Tokio. Mr. Holmes visited all the countries now involved in war only a few months before hostilities began.

Since John Quit Drinking

By John's Wife.

I'm the happiest little woman,
In all this little town;
And my merry laugh and singing.
Takes the place of sigh and frown.
For JOHN HAS QUIT HIS DRINKING
And is like himself once more,
And the world is just a paradise
With such happiness in store!

One day I read some verses—
"Mary's Miracle," the name,
And I said, that's John exactly,
And I'll send and get the same.
So I sent for GOLDEN REMEDY,
(As sly as sly could be)
And I put it in John's supper
And I put it in his tea.

And it didn't taste a little bit;
Had no odor, so, you see—
It was smoothest kind of sailing
For little Doctor Me.
And I watched and prayed and waited,
(And cried some, too, I guess),
And I didn't have the greatest faith,
I'm ashamed now to confess.

And John never thought a minute,
He was being cured of drink,
And soon he's as well as any one,
It makes me cry and think!
Just makes me cry for gladness,
I'm so proud to be his wife—
Since he is cured of drinking,
And leads a nice, new life.

"Since John he quit a-drinking!"
I can't say it times enough!
And hates and loathes a liquor
As he would a poison stuff.
And when I say my prayers at night
As thankful as can be—
I pray for John the most of all—
Then GOLDEN REMEDY.

73 SPEAKERS ON CIVIC LEAGUE LIST FOR PUBLIC CALLS

Addresses on a Wide Range of Subjects Offered to Societies and Organizations.

BIGGER DEMAND EXPECTED

Opening of School Buildings to Citizens Increases Interest in Public Affairs.

The Civic League yesterday sent to every organization in St. Louis interested in public affairs, a booklet of public speakers and topics of most interest at this time to St. Louis. This booklet has been prepared annually by the league for the last five years, especially to encourage organizations to discuss the work of public departments.

The list of subjects and speakers has been compiled with the assistance of the Conference of Federations, composed of the leading federations of the city, so that it is thoroughly representative of all sides of public issues. The general groups of subjects are "Municipal Housekeeping," "Education," "Political Reform," "Social and Economic Reform," "Industrial Conditions," "Public Health," "Social Service," "Public Recreation," "Public Morals" and "Organized Civic Movements."

Speakers are to be secured by application to the Civic League.

Many of the talks are to be illustrated by stereopticon. The Civic League has a collection of about 1000 slides, any of which can be secured free of charge by any organization. The collection composes a large number of European views, a smaller number of views of American cities and full sets of St. Louis views. The subjects covered by the slides are river fronts, city planning, parks and boulevards, streets, public buildings, municipal art, playgrounds, school gardens, home improvement, trees, historical scenes in St. Louis, and housing.

The names of 73 speakers are listed, most of whom are officials in the city government, Board of Education or some other official body. More than 100 applications were filed through the office of the Civic League last year. The applications came from women's clubs, church clubs, improvement associations, school patrons' associations, and the like.

This year an even larger use of the bureau is expected on account of the opening of the public schools to free use by citizens. Already the local committees in charge of the activities in 19 schools have asked for courses in civics with talks by public officials. In this way it is hoped to bring municipal government closer to the people of the city.

FOURNIER PAINTINGS TO BE SHOWN IN ART MUSEUM

The City Art Museum opens today a new special exhibition, comprising 35 paintings by Alexis Jean Fournier, an American artist.

Fournier has studied in France a great deal and particularly in the country about the village of Barbizon, and the Forest of Fontainbleau, where Rousseau, Corot, Tryon, Dupre, Diaz and others of their school were so long associated. The new exhibition by Fournier illustrates this "Barbizon painters' country" and the haunts and homes of the great artists. "Corot's Studio," "Millet's Birthplace," "Daubigny's Houseboat on the River Oise," are some of the subjects.

Fournier brings out the intimate features of the theme, so that the picture is especially instructive to students of the art masters. At the same time Fournier's pictures are well painted and well composed, and have been much praised.

The new collection occupies galleries 20 and 31 in the west wing, and will continue on view during November.

LIGHTHOUSE MISSION TO OCCUPY NEW HOME TODAY

Services Will Be Held in Building at 4538 Wichita Avenue and There Will Be Parade.

The Lighthouse Memorial Mission, of which the Rev. J. H. Flower is superintendent, will formally occupy its new $9000 building at 4538 Wichita avenue today with special services in the morning, a public meeting at 3 p. m. and a street parade.

The six months' gospel campaign, which had been held in a tent at Tower Grove and Norfolk avenues, ended Thursday night.

Because of lack of money only one story has been built on the new mission, but when more space is needed the building will be enlarged. The auditorium, which now seats 500, will have double the seating space when it is completed. At a recent meeting of the mission the Rev. Mr. Flower was re-elected superintendent and the Rev. R. V. Starr his assistant. Mrs. Flower was chosen as city missionary.

JOHN: I have decided that I love you best. You can buy the diamond ring at Loftis Bros. & Co., the National Credit Jewelers, 2d floor, 308 N. Sixth st.; open evenings.

Immaculate Conception Dance Thursday.

The first informal dance of the season by the Immaculate Conception parish, Longfellow boulevard and Lafayette avenue, will be given at the parish hall, Park and Cardinal avenues, on Thursday. The proceeds of the dance will be given to charity.

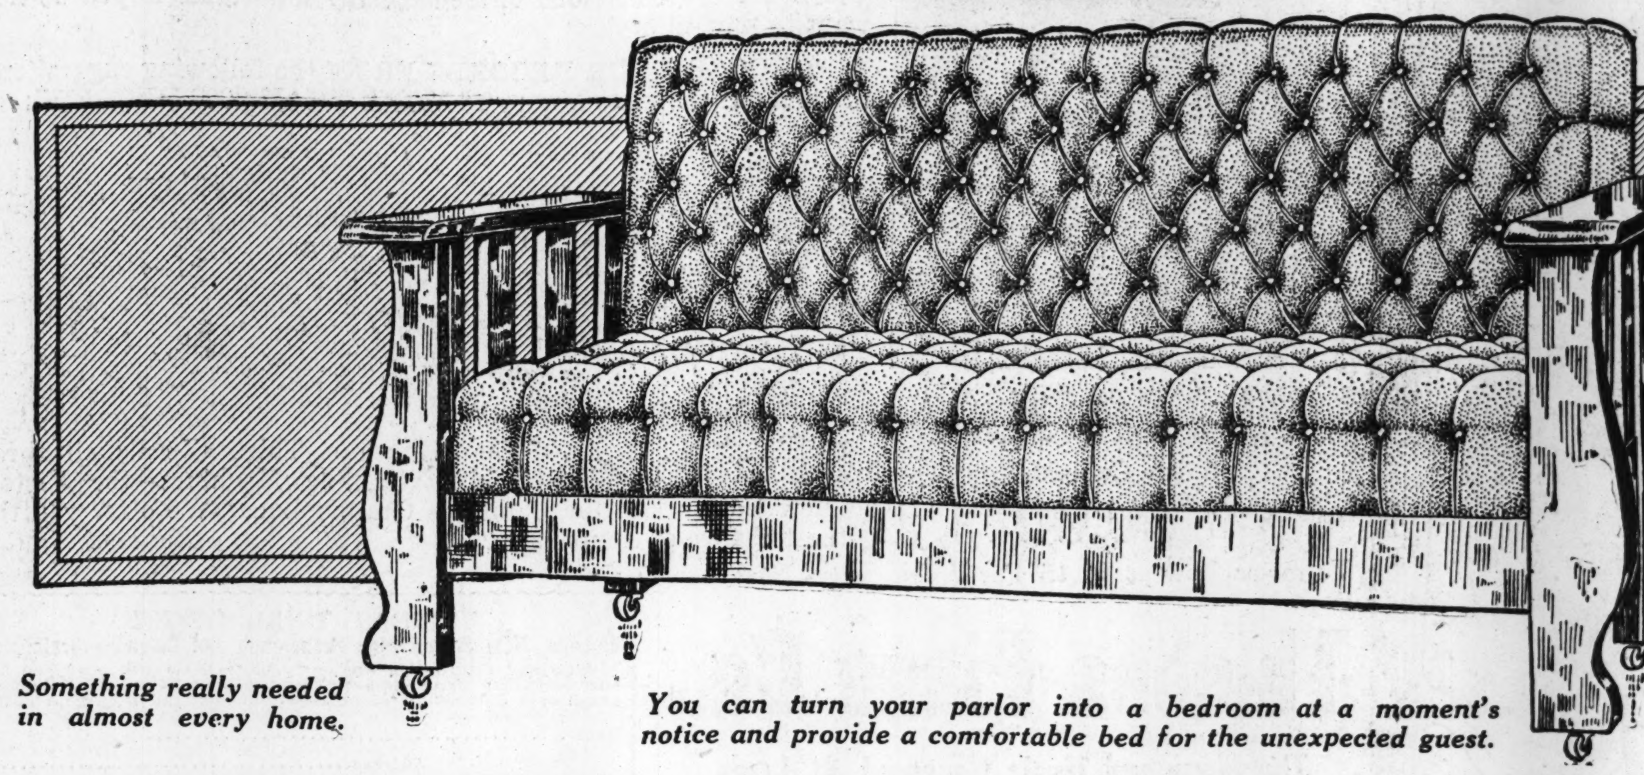
THIS MASSIVE BED-DAVENPORT $14.75

A Parlor Davenport by Day
$1 CASH

A Broad, Comfortable Bed at Night
$1 A MONTH



Something really needed in almost every home.

You can turn your parlor into a bedroom at a moment's notice and provide a comfortable bed for the unexpected guest.

It gives you an extra bedroom in your home.

Again—This Remarkable Offering

MONTHS ago we placed an order with one of the best makers for a tremendous quantity of these splendid Bed-Davenports for all our various stores—and on account of the magnitude of our purchase, we were able to secure them at a great saving—and in this sale we are giving you the benefit of the special low price that we secured.

Same Bed-Davenport We Offered Before

In style, construction and finish this is the same Bed-Davenport we offered to our patrons in a previous sale—the offering at that time created a positive sensation and closed them all out in short order. We anticipate an equally great success this week—and earnestly advise you to make your selections early.

Exactly as Shown in Illustration

THE illustration shows this handsome Bed-Davenport exactly as it is—but to appreciate its size, construction and beauty of finish you must come and see it for yourself. It is big, broad and comfortable—the frames are of solid oak and finished in a manner that would do credit to the finest class of furniture.

The Upholstering Is Really Superb

In the upholstering of these Bed-Davenports—we particularly specified a high grade of imitation leather—a fabric that has all the appearance of genuine leather and will wear even better than real leather often does, as it will never peel, rub or crack. The back and seat are evenly tufted over rows of spiral oil-tempered springs—and cannot sag.

Four Ticks of the Clock—and It's a Bed

THE ease with which this handsome Parlor Davenport can be converted into a big, broad and comfortable double bed is a surprise to all who see it—it is almost automatic in action, works so easily that a child can open it—and has a roomy compartment underneath in which to store the bed clothes when not in use.

Note the Price and the Easy Terms

This is a Bed-Davenport that can not be equaled anywhere under $25.00—our price is only $14.75—and all you pay is $1.00 cash and $1.00 a month—a special inducement we are offering you to open an account with us this week—and we trust you will take full advantage of the opportunity.

Business

BY CLARK M'ADAMS.

BUSINESS was devised by those provident people who tired of lending things and giving them away. We ourselves oftentimes find it necessary to put our relations with someone upon a business basis. This applies to friends and sometimes severely to relatives. If it were not for business life would be a terrible mess. It is a terrible mess wherever the rules of business do not apply. This seems severe, but I am talking about life—not someone's ideal of what life ought to be or might be made to become.

There are several kinds of business. They are business, good business, bad business, big business, little business, queer business, crooked business and monkey business. There is also fine business, which is a pleasant form of good business. Business itself may be defined as the gentle art of exchanging values. In good business we make this exchange to our mutual advantage, and in bad business we don't. It is presumably good business in which most people are engaged. To this kind of business we owe our more permanently pleasant downtown relations, the continuing volume of trade, and what might be termed our regular incomes. No one suffers severely in good business. There was a great deal of pain and injustice before we made good business good, but since then it has done very well. When we speak of the times, we refer to good business, its state of health, the alacrity with which it gets around and the extent to which everybody is probably doing some of it.

BAD business is another thing. Well into good business, we are well out of bad. It takes a shrewd wit to tell them apart, and the business men of any community may be accepted as about the only people in the community who can tell them apart. Bad business doesn't usually look it. A little more tempting than good business, presenting more allurements and exercising more blandishments, it is much the handsomer of the two and seems decidedly the more desirable. People therefore usually get into bad business quicker than they get into good, and they usually have to be helped out. Bad business has a peculiar fascination for some people. They get into it and out of it more or less all their lives, and seem unable to very long leave it alone. A singular distinction between good and bad business is that while one must one's self be the sole judge of whether one is getting into good business, anybody can see when one is getting into bad. It is the easiest thing in the world to see when someone else is getting into bad business. You have probably noticed it. Good business, upon the other hand, is almost never detected as good business until one has been in it long enough to discover that for one's self. Thus one may be in good business without knowing it, but if one is in bad business one is told so by every friend one meets. Whether one is ever conscious of being in bad business before everybody else knows it is doubtful. People are too busy with one kind of business and another to have figured it out.

BIG business may be defined as that which makes business of business. Until we had big business we had no idea of making a business of business. One did business because it was an accepted means of maintaining a visible means of support. No one dreamed of subordinating everything to business until business itself became a business. John D. Rockefeller seems to have been the father of that idea. At any rate, it has been very popular, and we owe to it some things which will remain as monuments to it, even if it proves in the end to have been too big for this earth. Nothing but big business makes possible the bestowal by individuals of such gifts as would tax the resources of a kingdom. It is a question if big business is very wrong. There is a theory that inasmuch as most of us are extravagant, it is just as well that Mr. Rockefeller or Mr. Carnegie saves what we could all save and does with it probably about what we would all do with it if we had saved it. There are many philosophical people who do not save money to any enduring or educational end. They consider that as long as an indulgent society permits lax conditions under which big business can hold sway, there are a few rich men doing the saving for all. Thus, the Rockefeller foundation is to feed the starving populace of Belgium. How many of us, confronted by this emergency, would have saved anything to this noble end? Probably none. Big business is usually spoken of as being infernal. As a matter of fact, it is largely paternal. An occasional rich man does buy a chorus girl, which most of us are disposed to regard as a waste of money, but in the main the excess wealth of the earth is in very good hands.

LITTLE business is that in which we blush to get caught, queer business is that in which we get our intrinsic values and our moral values mixed, crooked business is an eruption with which all business sometimes breaks out, and monkey business is a facetious form of business in which we all exercise that playful side of human nature which keeps life from being too deadly serious. Unfortunately, a good monkey business man rarely makes a good business man. We wish it were not so, for playfulness of heart is what keeps the world young, and we too soon grow old. If the King could jest, it would oftentimes relieve the pressure at court. We are, though, so thoroughly business-like that we must make a business of jesting, too. We pay people to cheer us, whereas each of us must have been equipped at the outset with a self-cheering device that has only failed us for having so long been in disuse. Strangely enough, one engaged in a good line of monkey business, and doing well at it, is not regarded as a business man at all. He is a clown. It is similarly true that the man in big business is ordinarily a scarecrow and that the man in good business is usually a dim-lighted tomb, except that we do not think in those terms. It is a matter of custom. It is conceivable that in another era we may have an aristocracy of cheerfulness, and that men shall be rated according to the good stories they know and not with respect to their more material possessions. I don't expect to see that time, nor do you; but when we occasionally try it for a brief hour, we find it very pleasant, indeed. The possibilities of big business, and perhaps of crooked business, as well, have been probably fully explored. Those of monkey business remain for the most part undeveloped. The big monkey business man has not yet arisen. We have had only Morgan, Rockefeller, Carnegie and Dr. Cook. The reason is that man has but lately become gregarious. The city is a new thing in the world. The club is even yet an experiment. Men lived in the wilderness, there brooding with nature. They occupied caves. Imagine an unhappy marriage in a cave! They have but recently come out of their several dwellings into the warmth of what each may find likeable in another. They are just winning their place in the sun. Another 10,000 years and good fellows, irrespective of any other virtue, will probably wear diamonds. Have you ever thought how strange it is that we usually do not like people we do not know? It is because we have not yet warmed to one another. We are too recently from that isolation in which each man's world lay under his nose. Asked if he did not dislike someone, Walt Whitman said: "Dislike him? Of course not—I know him." Ah! Walt. Thou wise man.

Martine's Penitent to Work for Lord—"if It's Honorable"

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.

SENATOR JAMES E. MARTINE of New Jersey, referring to peculiar slips of the tongue sometimes made in the excitement of religious fervor, told the following at a dinner party:

Some time ago, the Senator said, a revival was held in a North Jersey town, and, notwithstanding the fact that Sam attended the services night after night, all efforts to lead him to the altar seemed futile. One evening, however, to the great joy of the brethren, he assumed a penitent attitude.

"Parson," said Sam, rising to his feet, "I have been a sinner all my life, but from now on I want to do what's right."

"Bless the brother! Bless the brother!" encouragingly responded the evangelist. "Are you willing to work for the Lord?"

"Yes, sir," humbly answered the penitent Sam, "I will do anything the Lord asks me to do, providing it's honorable."

Wagner's Wooing Baron Depends on Figures as Proof of Love

"FIGURES can't lie," said Representative Wagner, apropos of a Galveston girl's wooing at the hands of a Polish Baron. "There's nothing like figures.

"This Galveston girl, entering the parlor one evening, said to her father in surprise:

"'Why, where's the Baron?'

"'I've just told the Baron, my dear,' the old man answered, 'what your dowry is to be, and he has retired to the library to figure out whether he loves you or not.'"

Tipsy Barber Cut "Big Tim;" Said Liquor Made Skin Tender

"ONE of the best stories I ever heard was told by the late 'Big Tim' Sullivan on himself, when he was attending Congress," said Senator Ashurst the other day.

"Sullivan's experience was with a barber on Pennsylvania avenue. He went into the shop one morning and reposed carefully in the chair, as had been his custom.

"For two or three mornings Big Tim had noticed that the barber had been drinking, but hesitated to speak of it. Finally the razor slipped with a nervous jerk under the surface of the skin.

"'There, you idiot!' Sullivan shouted, jumping from the chair. 'Now you see what liquor does!'

"'Yes,' demurely replied the unexcited barber, 'it is apt, very apt, to make the skin tender.'"

$14,000 RAISED IN Y. W. C. A. CAMPAIGN; HALF TIME GONE

Several Persons Contribute $1000 Each—Firms Will Be Asked to Buy Membership.

NOT A WORK OF CHARITY

Extension Centers Outside St. Louis Ask Institution to Help in Organization.

The first half of the Y. W. C. A. $60,000 finance and membership campaign closed yesterday. The receipts for the fifth day were $1125.50, making the total for the five days $14,044.40, a little less than one-fourth the necessary amount.

"The spirit with which the public, and especially the business public, have greeted the campaign workers," said Mrs. W. R. Chivvis, president of the Y. W. C. A., "gives us every reason to hope that we will get the required $60,000. We have had several $1000 contributions, and pledges for several other large amounts, but best of all is the knowledge of the appreciation by the public of our work.

"Thomas H. West, in his address before the Y. W. C. A. workers Friday, proposed a plan to urge each firm in St. Louis that employed girls and women to take out a yearly membership for each girl. He said he was sure employers would find it a good investment.

Y. W. C. A. Doing Good Work.

"The Y. W. C. A. is doing marvelous constructive work among the young women of St. Louis. We are not in any sense a charitable institution. The membership includes some of the wealthiest women in St. Louis and business and professional women commanding handsome incomes and the girls who are working for a small wage, but the spirit is most democratic and works for a higher standard of American womanhood. True, the Y. W. C. A., or rather, the members, do a great deal of charity work, but this is incidental to the great civic, social, educational and religious work."

The Lindenwood College of St. Charles asked the co-operation of the Physical Education Department of the Y. W. C. A. in organizing its physical education department and gymnasium, and in return contributed $100 toward the finance campaign. Four other extension centers outside of the city have asked the St. Louis Y. W. C. A. to co-operate with them in organizing their physical and recreation departments. In the Y. W. C. A. gymnasium classes there are now 408 pupils enrolled and 293 pupils in the extension centers—in factories and social centers. There are 24 young women in the normal class, which enables the physical educational department to meet the demands made upon it by the extension centers.

Developing the Best in Girls.

The Y. W. C. A. recognizes the necessity of conserving the home life in order to develop the best in a girl. To meet this need of those who have been forced to be away from their own homes, as well as those without homes and in distress, the Annex, 1420 Locust street, has been established and is presided over by Mrs. H. H. Marden. Since the opening of the annex, a little over a year ago, 713 girls have registered from every part of the United States, England, Holland, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, Spain and Poland. Of this number 217 have been without money; 1410 nights' lodgings were furnished and 1000 meals were given, amounting to $187.54. More than fifty runaway girls have been returned to their parents or relatives.

It is almost impossible to separate the work of three departments—the Girls' Work, girls between 12 and 18 years, directed by Miss Gertrude Prack; the Industrial Work, directed by Miss Mary Howard, and the Extension Work, conducted by Miss Luella Taylor. Miss Prack works among factory and department store girls. This interesting group is known as the Hearth Fire Girls. Miss Taylor and Miss Howard work among the older girls employed in the factories and stores, providing noon-hour entertainment and forming clubs which meet in the club rooms of the Y. W. C. A. They plan for good times, good friends, recreation, education and inspiration.

Many Things Are Taught.

Miss Mary Fulton has charge of the Educational Department, which affords the members an opportunity of studying household science, domestic science, domestic art, millinery, sewing, dressmaking, stenography, bookkeeping, typewriting, general office work, English, French, German, Spanish, elocution, music—instrumental and vocal, etc.

The Employment Bureau is in charge of Mrs. Clara A. Coates and Miss Emma Harding. During October 942 girls and women registered for industrial employment; 333 for clerical positions; there were 659 calls for industrial help, 127 for clerical help. Three hundred and ninety-five industrial and 127 clerical positions were filled.

There are Bible classes and free Vesper services every Sunday evening.

The campaign workers will renew their efforts to collect the $60,000 before Friday. The street cars will be placarded with signs telling that the Y. W. C. A. wants $60,000 cash at once.

Nurses in the War

What the Women Are Doing

The women of the warring nations are nursing, cheering and comforting the wounded or dying. The women of Europe not only wrap bandages and scrape lint, but they tend the farms, dig coal, carry burdens and do the work of the men now under arms. Every male fighter, however brawny and heroic, was born of woman: the high courage and hardihood that are a nation's strength are inherited from the mother.

Young mothers who preserve the charms of face and figure in spite of an increasing family and the care of growing children are always to be envied. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription gives the strength and health. It enables the mother to nourish the infant life depending on her, and enjoy the hourly happiness of watching the development of a perfectly healthy child.

Thousands of women who are now blessed with robust health cannot understand why thousands of other women continue to worry and suffer from ailments peculiar to women when they can obtain for a trifling sum Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which will surely and quickly banish all pain, distress and misery and restore to perfect health.

HOT MEALS AT 6 CENTS EACH PROVE SUCCESS

Organizer of Club at Washington Public Library Tells How It Is Done.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Miss Ruth H. Todd, clerk at the Washington Public Library, thinks that she has solved the problems of the high cost of living. She has found a way to serve six substantial hot meals a week for 35 cents—less than 6 cents a meal. Miss Todd has organized a club with 60 members, and a luncheon is served every working day.

MONDAY.
Baked macarons with tomatoes.
Stewed apples.
TUESDAY.
Irish stew. Prunes.
WEDNESDAY.
Creamed potatoes.
Baked stuffed tomatoes.
THURSDAY.
Hashed browned potatoes.
Lettuce and tomato salad.
FRIDAY.
Creamed tuna. Baked potatoes.
SATURDAY.
Baked rice and tomatoes.
Apples sliced and stewed.

Every meal includes bread and butter.

The luncheons are served in a neat, home-like dining room, which is part of the library equipment. The kitchen is equipped with a gas stove, sink, running water, refrigerator and china closet. Out of the weekly assessment $5 is set aside for the cook.

"The plan of furnishing a hot luncheon for 5 5-6 cents a day is rapidly passing from the experimental stage to actuality," said Miss Todd today. "We are no longer wondering whether we can possibly afford this or that article of food, by way of a little treat, perhaps once a week, but are now having it, and are making both ends meet.

"The desire for such a scheme of things grew out of the fact that more than half of the employes of the public library are compelled, because of library hours, to miss home dinners three days in the week. The persistent sameness of a paper-bag luncheon, while it might be tolerated at noon, certainly finds no favor as a substitute for a hot dinner such as one gets at home. Only one meal is eaten at the library. That is, if one has supper here, luncheon is eaten elsewhere."

COLLEGE OF PHARMACY TO CELEBRATE 50TH YEAR

Educators From Other Cities Will Deliver Addresses on Anniversary Occasion.

Formal exercises will be held Tuesday evening in the Central High School Auditorium in celebration of the semicentennial of the St. Louis College of Pharmacy.

The St. Louis college was formally established on Nov. 11, 1864, at a meeting of physicians and pharmacists of the city held in the hall of the St. Louis Medical College, on Seventh street and Clark avenue. It was chartered March 19, 1867.

The college's first permanent home was in the Insurance Exchange Building, at the southeast corner of Broadway and Olive street. In 1884 it was moved to a new building at 412 South Sixth street, and in 1892 to its present home at 2108-2110 Locust street.

Speakers at the celebration Tuesday will be Col. C. P. Walbridge, former president; Prof. Joseph P. Remington, Philadelphia College of Pharmacy; Prof. Charles Caspari Jr., Maryland College of Pharmacy; Prof. Frederick J. Wulliung, University of Minnesota; Dr. James H. Beal, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the United States Pharmacopoeial Convention, and Dr. Joseph L. Boehm, a graduate in the class of 1896.

2500 PLANTS IN "MUM" SHOW AT SHAW'S GARDEN

The Chrysanthemum Show in the New Conservatory of the Missouri Botanical Garden is now at its best. Owing to the warm weather it is doubtful if the show will continue throughout the month of November, as Dr. George T. Moore, director of the garden, had planned. Madame "Mum" is a cold-weather flower and thrives best when the air has been chilled by the breath of Jack Frost.

The collection of yellow chrysanthemums is perhaps the largest and finest display ever shown in one exhibit. The colors range from a deep gold to a rich cream.

More than 6000 persons visited the garden last Sunday, the first day of the display, and hundreds of people came daily during the week. It is expected that the attendance will be much larger today.

The display contains over 2500 plants, bearing from one to 5000 blossoms. There are 1000 yellow-flowered chrysanthemums. Thirty-five new varieties are shown publicly for the first time.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS TO BE PATTEN'S PLEA

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—J. A. Patten, sued yesterday in the United States Federal Court in New York, under the Sherman act, by parties who alleged that they lost $100,000 in the so-called "corner in oats" in 1902, said today that the statute of limitations had run against the case and his attorney had informed him he need pay no attention to the suit.

The plaintiffs, Charles Waite and R. H. Thorburn, Patten said, sued him and his associates in the courts of Illinois a year or two after the deal and lost in the Supreme Court at Springfield.

CHILD BORN ON A TRAIN

Stork Brings Husky Boy to Woman on Way to Texas.

FORT WORTH, Tex., Nov. 7.—"Duff Braziel" is the name of a baby boy who was born on a train as it was pulling out of Fort Worth. Mrs. Braziel, the child's mother, was on her way to Quanah, Tex., to join her husband.

She was a passenger on the chair car on a Fort Worth & Denver train. She was removed to a Pullman, where a generous passenger gave up his berth and a part of his clothing for the new baby. The child was named for Edmund T. Duff, claim agent of the railway.

W. T. Humphrey Dies at Shelbina.

SHELBINA, Mo., Nov. 7.—W. T. Humphrey, father of former State Senator G. W. Humphrey, died here this morning. He was 83 years old.

IF YOUR CHILD'S TONGUE IS COATED GIVE A TEASPOONFUL "SYRUP OF FIGS."

No matter what ails your child a laxative should be the first treatment given.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign your "little one's" stomach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once, when cross, peevish, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally; if breath is bad, stomach sour, system full of cold, throat sore, or if feverish, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in just a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and undigested food will gently move out of the system and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless fruit laxative. Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure. They also know a little given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. Get the genuine, made by "Califonia Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.—ADV.

NEBRASKA MAKING FIGHT TO RECOVER HER SCHOOL LANDS

Federal Survey Being Made to Determine Lines Originally Laid Out in State.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 7.—The State of Nebraska is threatened with the loss of a great slice of its school lands and the State officials have appealed to the Federal Government to assist them in preserving intact the lands which constitute the base of the Nebraska school fund. The trouble has been brewing many years, but is only now reaching a crisis. To a large extent the error can be traced back to the famous "beer bottle" survey made when the State was thrown open to homestead settlement, but this is not the only contributing cause of the trouble which the State land officials now find with the property in their charge.

When Nebraska was first surveyed the engineers found great difficulty in marking section lines. There was scarcely any timber from which permanent stakes could be made and the surveyors used the refuse of their camp with which to mark township, sections and other lines. Sometimes an old tomato can was half buried in the ground and used as a base for a township's survey.

One particular set of engineers was said to have carried a case of beer with them whenever they could get the beverage and the empty bottles, thrust neck deep in the sand, were all utilized as section corners. From this fact the first survey of Nebraska is called the "beer bottle" survey.

It is said that often the partakers of the beer made section and township corners out of a spade full of earth. And the first rain that fell after the surveyors had passed on obliterated all traces of their work. The tomato cans rusted away. The coyotes dug up the beer bottles. And the little piles of earth returned to the level.

New Surveys Changed Lines.

When the settlers entered the country there were very few indications of the survey. Only now and then were the corners of the Government survey discernible. The result was the resurveying by locators and county surveyors and the establishment of corners by them. And these corners rarely coincided with the corners of the official survey. Consequently, the section lines, as well as those of townships, were often quite a distance from those lines as run by the Government engineers.

When Nebraska was made a State, sections 16 and 36 in every township in the State were given to the Commonwealth as a basis for its permanent school fund. Some of this land was sold outright, and provided the cash for the establishment of district schools as well as for the State University. The remaining sections were held by the State and are rented or leased, the income from this source being devoted to educational purposes.

In 1895 Congress ordered a resurvey of Nebraska lands, but the order provided that no bona fide occupant should lose his land through the new survey. Several years were required by the engineers to complete this work. When it was finished the field notes and plats were submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington and were approved by him before they were made public. Then it was found that all errors, shortages, etc., were taken out of the school sections.

In some cases where the Commonwealth was the owner of a section of rich bottom lands, the new surveyors had turned this over to some settler and had given the State in lieu thereof a section of land on top of a ridge of sand.

Settlers Got Best Land.

"In one case in Garden County," says State Surveyor Robert Harvey, "140 acres of valuable hay land were cut in a strip 40 rods wide out of the heart of the school section, leaving a strip of school land on either side. In another section 160 acres of hay land were cut slick and clean from the heart of the good land. In Hooker County three townships were resurveyed and the shortages and deficiencies were thrown into the school tier of sections instead of into the tier in which they belonged according to the original survey."

Conditions finally reached such a state that the Board of Educational Lands and Funds sent the Assistant Attorney-General of the State to Washington to urge upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office the necessity of making a third survey of certain parts of Nebraska, where the errors were most flagrant. In accordance with the request of the State, Government engineers were sent to Nebraska and for a number of months have been at work on a new survey in which they are making an effort to protect the property of the State.

Instead of giving each farmer and rancher everything he claims and then throwing the shortage of land upon the State, the Government men are attempting to follow the lines of the old "beer bottle" survey whenever it is possible to locate them. The Nebraska board has pointed out that the school lands will be seriously impaired unless action of this kind is taken.

TROUSERS LOST ON TRAIN

LA CROSSE, Wis., Nov. 7.—When A. L. Bliss and R. W. Willis of Chicago awoke in a sleeper at La Crosse they discovered their trousers were missing, together with watches, money and railroad tickets. Mrs. Bliss missed a traveling suit and petticoat. The train was held until a clothing merchant could be found to open his store before breakfast and supply the two males travelers with garments to take the place of their pajamas. Over $300 worth of valuables were taken from their berths.

Special November Sales

Stix, Baer & Fuller D. G. Co Grand-Leader

Entire Block—Sixth, Washington, Seventh and Lucas

Tomorrow This Store Begins a Mercantile Event of Far-reaching Importance

The Special November Sale is a direct result of the extraordinary conditions now prevailing.

A sale of the magnitude of this one—a sale offering the sensational values quoted throughout this page as well as in the three pages of advertising we have taken in today's Globe-Democrat and Republic—could not possibly happen except as the result of just such conditions as exist at this time.

No mail, phone or C. O. D. orders will be accepted on "Special November Sale" offerings, nor will any of the goods advertised be sent on approval.

In no instance will dealers be supplied.

The average person cannot begin to imagine the plight of manufacturers and jobbers with large stocks of Fall and Winter goods on hand.

The European war as well as the unfavorable weather conditions have exacted a heavy toll.

Our buying force, sent East over two weeks ago, took full advantage of the extraordinary conditions prevailing in the markets.

The majority of them returned with the best bargains of their entire career, and the Special November Sale which begins tomorrow, will prove

This Store's Master-Effort at Value-Giving

COLLECTING OLD LINEN

The Salvation Army in St. Louis has started an "Old Linen Campaign" for the benefit of the wounded in the European war. Women throughout the city are asked to send any old linen they may have to the Army headquarters, 401 Fullerton Building, or telephone to headquarters and a wagon will be sent for the linen.

Women of the Salvation Army will make the linen into bandages and pads to be shipped to the various battle lines. The Army has received reports that there is a great dearth of such material in the field and other hospitals of all nations at war.

NATURAL COLOR TO GRAY HAIR BY AIR

Hair dye is not a natural color restorative. It simply stains the hair by chemical action and leaves a lustreless finish that tells what you are using.

The simple, clean and healthful method is by using Hay's Hair Health, which contains an element that so prepares the hair that the air causes it to come back to its natural color.

It can't harm. It singles out every faded strand and restores it—makes it full color, healthy, lustrous. No other result can be produced.

If you want these benefits in your case begin at once the use of the natural method—Hay's Hair Health. Not a dye. No one will know you are using it. Anyone who purchases a bottle from any druggist who sells it in this town does so with a full understanding that the price is to be returned if the preparation does not please and satisfy. Judging from the fine results reported among people in St. Louis it would seem that in Hay's Hair Health the secret of eternal youth for the hair has been found. Sold in 25c, 50c and $1.00 sizes; made by Philo Hay Specialties Company, Newark, N. J.—ADV.

MAN TRIED AS SPY WAS DIVORCED BY RICH OMAHA GIRL

WHIRLWIND COURTSHIP

He Came From Germany to Oppose First Suit, but Ignores the Second.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 7.—The last act of an international romance in which a wealthy Omaha girl married an officer in the Kaiser's navy after a courtship of a few weeks and divorced him just as quickly, has just been staged in London, England, where the erstwhile bridegroom, Carl Hans Lody, was tried by courtmartial on the charge of being a German spy. Announcement of a verdict was reserved.

The bride was Miss Louise Storz, and, after the divorce decision and restoration of her maiden name, she again took up her residence with her father's family in Omaha, where she now resides

It was rumored in Omaha that the short acquaintance of the bride with the German officer cost the father-in law considerable money.

The Storz family deny this. Lody, in his testimony at the courtmartial, said he was given $10,000 to permit his wife to obtain a divorce.

The wedding took place in Omaha, Oct. 29, 1912, and exactly two years later Lody stood before the English military court and pleaded not guilty to the charge of espionage for the German army.

Whirlwind Courtship.

The courtship was of a whirlwind nature. Miss Storz, with a party of Omaha friends, started on a trip around the world, intending to be absent a year. They sailed from New York in the summer of 1912. On the steamer they became acquainted with Lody, who held a commission on the vessel. He and Miss Storz fell in love at first sight. When the steamer arrived in Europe the members of the Storz family started on their way.

Three days later they were joined by Lody, who had resigned his position. He followed the party from city to city and form country, to country, and before the tour was many weeks old, Miss Storz left the party and returned to Omaha, where Lody arrived a few days later.

The two young people seemed wildly fascinated with each other and the announcement of the engagement soon followed. On the heels of the engagement came the wedding ceremony. The honeymoon lasted a few weeks—and then came the question of housekeeping—anad the monthly bills.

Employed by Father-in-Law.

Lody had told his bride and her friends that he was an officer in the German naval reserves and that the position occupied by his family in Berlin was such that, together with his naval record, would give him and his wife entree to the most exclusive circles in the Kaiser's capital—and he had papers to prove his assertion. But he didn't have the money for the monthly bills.

Therefore he accepted a position in his father-in-law's establishment—and he and his wife moved into most elegant apartments. His rise in the business was not very rapid. Clerks said he showed a disposition to sit with his feet on the desk and play the part of the "boss" to the trusted old-time employes. One day he quit work altogether.

Then he went to work in Union Pacific headquarters in Omaha. "Going to begin at the bottom and learn railroading," he announced. His salary was $65 a month. He continued living in the elegant apartments.

About this time—a month or so after the marriage—rumors were heard of friction in the Lody household. Suddenly the elegant apartment was for rent. Lody has gone to Germany and Mrs. Lody was back at home with her parents.

Soon a divorce petition was filed. Lody was charged with cruelty—with having repeatedly struck his wife. When time for the trial appeared Lody appeared to fight the case. He had brought a lawyer from Berlin. "I won't permit my honor to be soiled," he said, magnificently.

Present Situation.

The case was postponed and Lody and his lawyer returned to London. Some months afterward the suit was called for trial. Lody did not appear and a divorce was granted to his wife upon the grounds of extreme cruelty. She refuses to make any comment upon her former husband's present situation.

In the course of his testimony before the courtmartial Lody stated that his American father-in-law paid him $10,000 to consent to his wife's obtaining a divorce. "It was to reimburse me for expenses, etc.," said he. That he obtained a single dollar is absolutely denied by the bride's family. "Not a cent did we pay Mr. Lody," said Gotlieb Storz, the father-in-law. "We got the divorce on the real merits of the case."

International matches are not now very much in favor in society circles in Omaha.

Coal Club to Give a Banquet.

GRAND OPERA STARS ARE TO BE HEARD AT CHARITY BALL

One of the Many Novel Features Announced for Guests' Entertainment.

TICKETS PUT AT $2.50

Proceeds Go to Benefit of the St. Louis Protestant Orphans' Home.

The committees in charge of the Charity Ball, which will be given at Dreamland Tuesday night, Nov. 17, announced yesterday that grand opera singers, who then will be appearing at the Odeon, will sing at the ball. This is only one of many novel features which are being planned.

The St. Louis Protestant Orphans' Home, for the benefit of which the Charity Ball will be given, is one of the oldest institutions of its kind in the United States. It is the oldest in Missouri. It was established in 1834 and steadily has grown in importance year by year.

The plan of the committee this year has been to make the Charity Ball a popular event and with that end in view the tickets are placed at $2.50 each. That it will be a society event is assured by the long list of patronesses and members of the committee having the affair in charge.

Home Always Filled.

The orphans' home has a capacity of 87 and is always full. The cost per month per child is about $15. It is operated almost entirely by charity and the income from relatives of the orphans is very small compared to the cost of operation. Joseph H. Nathan donated Dreamland for the evening.

The officers and managers of the orphans' home are: Mmes. Elliott K. Ludington, president; Benjamin F. Bush, first vice-president; Edwin H. Steedman, second vice-president; Charles Wiggins, third vice-president; Alexander Robertson, fourth vice-president; Dwight Dana, recording secretary; Charles W. Moore, corresponding secretary; Fritz Nisbet, treasurer; Alden Little, recorder, and Miss Helen Teasdale, assistant treasurer.

Punch Committee—Mmes. Elliott K. Ludington, chairman; Judson Bemis, R. C. Day, H. S. Kimball and Miss Elizabeth Drew.

Cloak Committee—Mmes. Cecil D. Gregg, chairman; F. D. Seward, E. J. Pearson, Warwick Hough, Tom Pettus and Miss Teasdale.

Ticket Committee—Mmes. Henry Boeckeler, chairman; Alfred Hebard, Fritz Nisbet, D. H. Clark, Walter Birge and the Misses Georgia Elliott and Mary Semple.

Traffic Committee—Mmes. Ben F. Bush, E. K. Ludington.

Decoration Committee—Mmes. Clinton Whittemore, Sterling Edmunds, A. T. Terry, Samuel McCluney, E. A. Faust, Charles Wiggins and Edwin K. Love.

Publicity Committee—Mmes. E. H. Steedman, chairman; Benjamin F. Bush, Joseph Pulitzer Jr., E. A. Faust, J. D. Dana, G. F. Steedman and Miss Helen Morrill.

"BILLY SUNDAY'S" FRIENDS INVADE PHILADELPHIA

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—Nearly 1000 converts of "Billy" Sunday's meeting at Scranton and Wilkesbarre, six months ago, came here recently and held more than 400 meetings in all the leading churches of the city. They were preparing the way for Sunday, who is to hold a meeting here soon.

The men who led these meetings represented all grades of citizenship from the prosperous banker down to the humblest worker. Prominent professional men of the two up-State cities spoke in the same pulpits with former bartenders. Policemen, firemen, letter carriers, railroad employes, carpenters, blacksmiths, office clerks, doctors, lawyers, merchants and laborers were included in the number.

Wherever the men spoke they testified to the lasting good accomplished by "Billy" Sunday, and said they believed the great majority of those converted at his meetings continued to lead Christian lives.

MARIE SUNDELIUS TO BE HEARD AS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Young Swedish Soprana on the Program for Friday and Saturday.

The return of Marie Sunderlius, the young Swedish soprano who made her first visit to this city last winter, and the third American performance of the new Ropartz symphony No 4, will mark the second pair of symphony concerts Friday and Saturday.

The Ropartz symphony will have its third instead of its first American hearing in St. Louis only because the orchestra seasons in Chicago and Boston open earlier than that in St. Louis.

Guy Ropartz, composer of the symphony, is a dramatist and poet as well as a classic music, and according to recent report, is now at the front with the French army. The symphony was written in 1910, had its first public performance from manuscript in Paris the following year, and last year was a musical hit in Europe. It is a cyclic composition in one movement and is played in its entirety without pause.

Sang Here Last Year.

Mme. Sundelius sang at one of the Sunday afternoon "Pop" concerts given by the orchestra last year.

She will sing twice at each concert, giving Michaela's aria from "Carmen," and "Depuis le Jour" from Charpentier's opera "Louise," which St. Louis last heard sung by Mary Garden.

Following is the complete program:

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, Nov. 13 at 3:00.
SATURDAY EVENING, Nov. 14 at 8:15.
Soloist—Mme. Marie Sundelius, Soprano.
Program.
1—Weber ....Overture to "Euryanthe"
2—Bizet ..Michaela's Aria from "Carmen"
3—Ropartz ..Symphony No. 4 in C Major

TWO STORES
604 OLIVE 520 N. GRAND

Recital by Organist's Pupils.

The pupils of Miss Dolores Christophel, organist of St. Cronan's Church, will give a recital next Sunday evening at Strassberger's Hall, Grand and Shenandoah avenues.

OLD age can be made the period of greatest happiness, but complete good health is necessary. As age advances the stomach and bowel muscles lose their elasticity and no longer respond readily. The result is constipation, or dyspepsia, biliousness, sour stomach, bloating, drowsiness after eating, belching, headache, etc.

The foregoing was about the condition that Mr. Wm. A. Roeker, 64 Vienna St., Rochester, N. Y., found himself in some time ago. A good friend persuaded him to take Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a widely known laxative-tonic that has been on the market for two generations. After a brief use of it he writes that if he had the last bottle obtainable he would not part with it for a hundred dollars—and Mr. Roeker is not an especially rich man either —for he considers himself entirely well. Another noteworthy case is that of Mrs. Margaret Barringer of Newark, Ohio, who is 82.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is without doubt America's greatest household remedy. Its mild action recommends it especially for babies, women and old folks, for these should not take drastic cathartics and purgatives such as pills, powders, salt waters, etc. Your druggist sells Syrup Pepsin at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, and you should always have a bottle in the house. Thousands of old users always have the dollar size, as it is more economical. Results are guaranteed or money will be refunded.

Coupon for FREE SAMPLE

Dr. Caldwell is glad to send anyone who has never tried his remedy a free sample bottle for personal investigation. Simply clip this coupon and inclose in an envelope with your name and address, or write your name and address plainly on a postcard and mail it to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 67 Washington st., Monticello, Ill.

UNIFORM LAWS TO BE CHIEF TOPIC BEFORE GOVERNORS

Conference Which Convenes at Madison This Week to Hear Many Papers on Subject.

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 7.—Discussion of the practicability of uniform legislation on several important questions now confronting the states will be the theme of many of the papers to be read before the Governors' Conference, which will meet here Nov. 10 to 14. Between 40 and 50 Governors, Governors-elect and former Governors are expected to attend. Invitations also have been extended to President Wilson and former Presidents Taft and Roosevelt, and many leading publicists and editors have signified their intention of being present.

Subjects up for discussion include rural credits, State control of natural resources, safety and sanitation laws, corporation control and publicity for all matters pertaining to State government.

Gov. Emmet O'Neal of Alabama, chairman of the Committee on Rural Credits, will make a report of the committee's study of this subject during the last 15 months. This is a subject of vital importance to the Southern States, which have suffered severely by the depression in the cotton market resulting from the European war. It is the opinion of many of the Southern Governors that a matured plan for long-time farm loans, at low rates of interest, the loans to be repaid in small installments, will be of infinitely greater benefit to the Southern States than the buy-a-bale cotton campaign.

Rural Credit Needed Now.

Financial distress growing out of the war has affected agricultural development in all parts of the country. The inability of the banks to loan on the unwieldy farm mortgage and the indisposition of bankers generally to take any chances at this time have made it necessary for the farmers to rely upon their friends and neighbors for the loans they need. It is the hope of many of the states to develop a system of rural credits which will enable the farmer to take his place in the community as a business man.

Two papers dealing with regulation of business are on the program. One of these is entitled "Uniformity of Laws Fixing the conditions to be Met by Foreign Corporations Before Doing Business in a State," and is to be delivered by Gov. Charles R. Miller of Delaware. The other is entitled "Uniformity of Safety and Sanitation Laws for Places of Employment, including Administrative Machinery." This is to be read by Gov. Edward F. Dunne of Illinois.

The Governors hold that industry does not object to reasonable regulation and supervision. The objection is that the other states have no such regulation or supervision and that the industries in states having such laws cannot compete with industries in states where no such laws are in force. They say this fear of laws regulating corporations has driven business into other states. By the discussion of these two papers the Governors' conference hopes to recommend to the Legislatures certain changes with respect to the laws on these subjects to promote uniformity.

Conservation Still Live Topic.

State control of natural resources, the subject which led to the formation of the Governors' conference in 1908, is still a live topic and a paper on that subject will be presented by Gov. William Spry of Utah. The entire day in which this paper is read will be devoted to a discussion of the differences of opinion held by Eastern and Western Governors on the question of State vs. Federal control of natural resources.

Extradition and changes in general practices now obtaining between the states will be discussed by Gov. S. V. Stewart of Montana.

"Submission of the Governor's Recommendations in Bill Form," will be the subject of an address by Gov. F. M. Byrne of South Dakota. This deals with the idea, recently put into practice by Gov. McGovern of Wisconsin for the first time, of embodying each recommendation of the Governor into the form of a bill to be transmitted to the Legislature with the Governor's message. Gov. Govern submitted his proposal for a State Market Commission at the last session of the Wisconsin Legislature in the form of a bill. Exercising the privileges of a member of the Legislature he then went before that body and formally introduced the bill.

Many of the Governors have spoken of getting uniform legislation. The recommendation of the Governor if expressed in the form of a bill which he would like to see enacted into a law has more weight with the Legislature.

The officers of the organization are an executive committee of three members, a secretary and a treasurer. Governors Francis E. McGovern of Wisconsin, Emmet O'Neal of Alabama and Elias M. Ammons of Colorado are the present members of the committee. Former Governor John Franklin Fort of New Jersey is treasurer. Membership in the organization is restricted to Governors, Governors-elect and former Governors.

Mrs. Belle Gray of 6204 Page avenue is seeking a temporary home for her two children, Annabelle, 12, and Lawrence, 9, while she obtains employment to save enough money to make a home for them. Mrs. Gray said her husband's treatment had forced her to seek work. She said he refused to provide for his family.

Mrs. Gray declared if she could find a place to put the children, other than an orphans' home, she would obtain housework and take another child, Paul, 6 years old, with her.

EATING MEAT REGULARLY CLOGS THE KIDNEYS, CAUSING PAINS IN THE BACK

Don't fail to flush your Kidneys occasionally with a tablespoonful of harmless fruit Salts to avoid danger.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimuate them to normal activity.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.—ADV.

CHAUFFEUR HELD FOR MURDER OF LA CROSSE GIRL

Prisoner, Alleged to Have Killed Her With Hammer, Is Guarded Against Mob.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Nov. 7.—The inquest over the body of Petra Solberg, the servant girl, who was murdered on a country road near here yesterday, and whose body was found in the La Crosse River, was begun today.

Henry Liso, chauffeur at the home where the girl was employed, is in jail, accused of taking her out in his employer's car, beating her with an automobile hammer, cutting her throat and throwing her body into the river.

Large crowds gathered around the jail during the day and threats were uttered. The police were prepared to rush Liso to Winona, to keep him out of danger, but finally decided that with the police and Sheriff's force and two militia companies, if necessary, the crowd could be handled.

LAMAR ARRESTED; LAUTERBACK WAS INDICTED WITH HIM

Former Pleads Not Guilty to Impersonating Members of Congress—$30,000 Bail.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—David Lamar, indicted in 1913 on a charge of impersonating Government officers with intent to defraud, pleaded not guilty today to each of three indictments and was held in $30,000 bail. Lamar, who had been fighting removal from the District of Columbia since his indictment, was arrested last night in an uptown hotel by agents of the Department of Justice.

Lamar will now be tried here, it is said, for alleged impersonation of Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer, of Pennsylvania, to defraud Louis Cass Ledyard, J. P. Morgan & Co. and the United States Steel Corporation. Before the Senate lobby investigating committee, Lamar admitted he had impersonated Congressman Palmer and Congressman Riordan of New York. He was arrested on this charge and also on a supplementary charge that he had represented himself as speaking on the authority of Speaker Clark and Senator Stone, of Missouri, in a telephone conversation.

In opposing a motion for reducing the amount of bail, made by Lamar later in the day before Federal Judge Hand, District Attorney Marshall told Judge Hand that the lawyer named with Lamar in the third indictment was Edward Lauterbach. Marshall said Lauterbach would surrender Monday.

It is charged that Lamar telephoned New York financiers urging them to employ Lauterbach as lawyer and that in these telephone conversations he represented himself at various times as various members of Congress.

TWO CADETS INJURED FIGHTING ALTON FIRE

Western Military Academy Students Save Two Houses and Four Horses.

Two Western Military Academy cadets, in Upper Alton, were injured yesterday afternoon when a company of cadets, as volunteer firemen, fought a fire which destroyed a house and barn near the academy.

The cadets saved four horses from the barn and extinguished fire on two houses, to which it had spread. The injured youths are Capt. Percy Wilson of Leavenworth, Kan., and J. Cervanka of Chicago. Wilson's hand was cut by glass and Cervanka's face and head were burned.

The fire started in the loft of a barn owned by John J. Henry. It spread to the Henry house. The house and barn were destroyed. To the north it spread to the home of Mrs. James Moore, and across the street to the home of William Loehr. The cadets climbed to the roofs of these houses and extinguished the flames with wet blankets and buckets of water.

Four horses in the Henry barn were led out by cadets, and household furniture was saved by them. Henry estimated the loss to his barn and residence at about $10,000.

3 PERSONS EACH GET 10 YEARS UNDER MANN ACT

Woman Sentenced With Two Men on Testimony of Her Daughter, 14 Years Old.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 7.—"On all three the hand of justice should fall with staggering force." That was the answer made today by Francis M. Wilson, District Attorney, to a plea for mercy for two men and a woman who had been convicted under the Mann act. One of the three was the mother of a girl 14 years old, who was in court.

The hand of justice fell. Judge Van Valkenburgh pronounced the heaviest sentence given in the Federal Court here for years—a prison term of eight years on two counts and two years on a third count—against all three defendants, the sentences to run concurrently.

The defendants were Edward J. King, George Murphy and Louise Miller. They came here from Chicago, and, according to the girl's testimony, forced her to support them.

2 ROADS GIVE UP CONTROL OF GREAT COAL COMPANIES

Chicago Operator Purchases $3,750,000 Holdings Under Decree in Trust Case.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 7.—Stock in several Eastern Ohio and West Virginia coal companies valued at $3,750,000 passed into the hands of John S. Jones, a coal operator of Chicago, today, as a result of an entry made by United States District Judges Warrington, Knappen and Denison, in the suit brought by the Government against the New York Central and Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad companies, their subsidiary lines and various coal companies controlled by them.

The case was brought by the Government under the Sherman anti-trust law and the Federal officials declared it to be the most sweeping victory that has ever been accomplished under the act. In legal annals the case is known as "the Eastern Ohio and West Virginia bituminous Coal Trust case."

Attorneys for both the railroads and the Government appeared before the Court today with an agreement that the properties of the railroads be disintegrated and ownership dissolved. The entry was made, the price fixed at $3,750,000 and a short time later Jones appeared in court and took over the stock for the amount named in the entry.

In buying the stock, Jones assumed the responsibility for the incumbrances on the land, which are said to run into millions of dollars.

CITY SOCIAL WORKERS OPPOSE "BREAD LINES"

Conference Adopts Resolution Declaring Its Adequacy to Meet All Emergencies.

The Social Service Conference, at its monthly meeting Friday, adopted resolutions discouraging the "bread line" and "soup kitchen" as a means of meeting a crisis in relief work which exists, and urging concentration of effort in the established agencies and cooperation among them.

C. M. Hubbard, manager of the Provident Association, reported that the association is taking care of 50 per cent more cases than in November last year. J. L. Hornsby, president of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, said it would be necessary soon to make an appeal for funds. Oscar Leonard of the United Jewish Charities said more families were being relieved than during last year.

The resolutions declared the machinery of the relief organizations is adequate to meet the emergency and can administer relief with the least confusion and the greatest economy.

INJUNCTION AGAINST EXECUTING MURDERER

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 7.—Members of the Arkansas Penitentiary Commission were enjoined today from executing the sentence of Arthur Hodges, sentenced to die Nov. 14 in the Arkansas penitentiary electric chair.

The injunction was issued by Judge J. E. Martineau of the Chancery Court under an old law which was invoked concerning hanging.

The commissioners were ordered to produce Hodges in Chancery Court Nov. 23, when he will be examined as to his sanity. It is claimed since a jury found him sane four months ago the prisoner has lost his mind. The commissioners announced this afternoon that they will contest the injunction. Hodges killed a Constable while attempting to avoid arrest.

HOOKWORM FIGHT IN PANAMA IS STARTED

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The International Health Commission organized by the Rockefeller Foundation has opened laboratories on the Isthmus of Panama for a systematic campaign against the hookworm.

The disease has been found to prevail there to an unexpected extent. Out of the first 1000 persons examined at one laboratory, more than 700 were found to be harboring hookworm and evidenced the accompanying anemia.

The blood of a boy of 10 years of age from whom the parasites had been recovered made only a plain yellow spot on a blotter, registering only about 10 per cent normal richness and color.

CHURCH WORKER DECLARES PRAYER HEALED 2 PERSONS

Tells Missionary Convention at Collinsville of Experiences at Sick Beds.

LIFE OF ONE GIVEN UP

East St. Louis Woman Recovered After Physicians Had Said Efforts Were Futile.

Mrs. C. L. Steidley, 659 North Thirteenth street, East St. Louis, who led the devotional exercises at the annual meeting of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Lebanon District, in the Collinsville Methodist Church, last Wednesday, told two remarkable instances of healing that had come, she said, in answer to prayer.

One case was that of a woman whose life had been despaired of. Ministers and physicians were at her bedside, as was also Mrs. Steidley. Prayer was offered and the patient began to grow better. Mrs. Steidley did not name the woman but there were those in the audience who recognized her as a member of the choir of the First Methodist Church, East St. Louis.

The second instance was of a child who had been operated upon for appendicitis. Peritonitis had set in. Prayer was offered and that afternoon the specialist, who had been summoned, said the child would recover. She referred to the child as "Arthur." Mrs. Steidley, in telling of her own experiences, said that when she lost things she always asked God's help and in return did not forget to give thanks.

Mrs. Steidley was elected president of the organization. Other officers elected were: Vice-presidents, Mrs. A. G. Jepson of East St. Louis, Mrs. Mary Church of Marissa, Mrs. W. T. Morris of East St. Louis; recording secretary, Mrs. J. B. Cummins, Greenville; corresponding secretary, Mrs. S. W. Robinson, Greenville; treasurer, Mrs. F. A. Behymer, Lebanon.

Mrs. J. W. Smith, wife of the minister at Tilden, Ill., won the next meeting for her town from Greenville and East St. Louis. In making her report she advocated interesting children and mentioned her own little girl, Elzirha, 9 years old, who is saving her pennies to get $10 for a life membership in the missionary society.

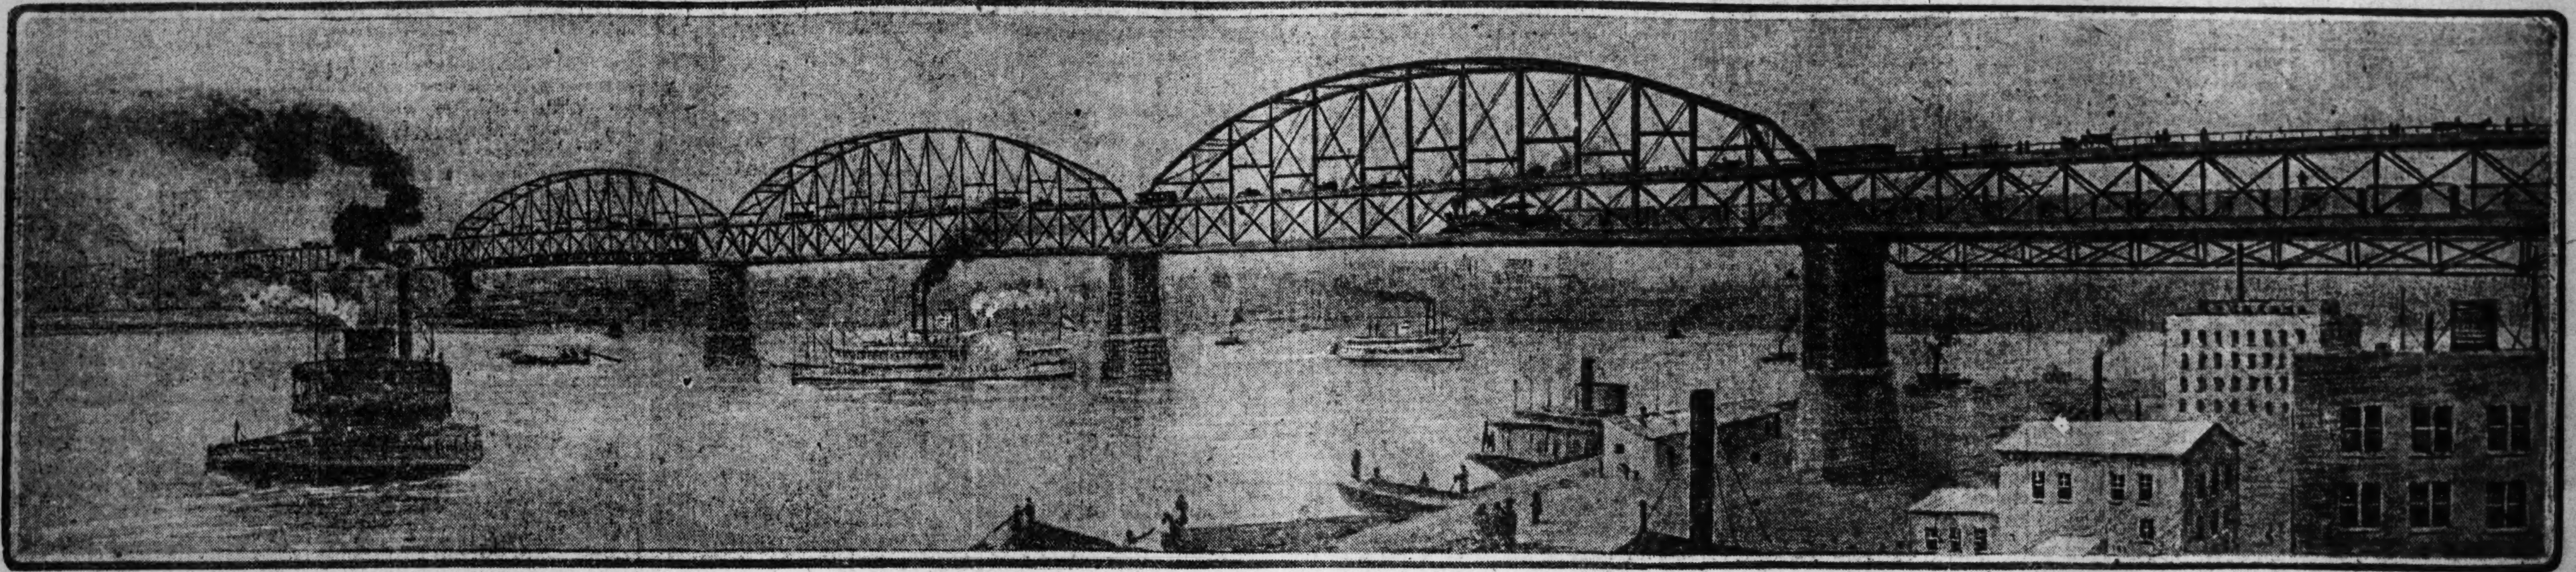
GERMANS RENEW ATTACK ALL ALONG THE WESTERN LINE

Troops From East to Aid in New Dash for French Coast



THE NEW EMBLEM OF ST. LOUIS—THE FINISHED FREE BRIDGE

To St. Louisans accustomed to see the approachless structure, spanning the river at the foot of Chouteau avenue, this picture will reveal an entirely new view of the free bridge, showing its approximate appearance when it is completed about 18 months from today. A complete architectural perspective of the completed bridge is not available for reproduction, but this illustration, showing the bridge from the eastern shore, is based on the official architectural plans. The part of it showing the over-river spans is a photograph of a painting made for Frank H. Gerhart, real estate dealer, who, according to records at the city hall, was the first citizen to suggest officially the building of a free bridge. As soon as the bridge plans were drawn Gerhart employed a painter to draw this picture of the spans from the architectural blue prints. The extension of the approaches is the work of a Post-Dispatch artist also working from the official plans.

FREE BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION TO BEGIN WITHIN MONTH IF ASSEMBLY ACTS PROMPTLY

Bill Appropriating $100,000 of Original Fund Now Before Municipal Body—Work Requires Eighteen Months.

Actual construction of the free bridge, interrupted in September, 1913, with the completion of the St. Louis railroad approach to Eighth and Gratiot streets, may be resumed within a month if the Municipal Assembly acts promptly on a bill appropriating $100,000 remaining to the credit of the original $3,500,000 bridge bond fund.

The Post-Dispatch started a campaign Jan. 19 to force the assemblymen to keep pre-election promises by starting work on the bridge before the end of 1914. But for the obstruction of 22 members of the House of Delegates, the bond issue which carried Friday by a 7-to-1 vote might have been adopted last April. The 22 Delegates defeated the Hines bill and stood pat for the Alton & Mississippi approach, forcing the public to file an initiative petition bearing 51,000 signatures in order to hold the election of last Friday.

President Kinsey of the Public Service Board will send the $100,000 appropriation bill to the Council and House Tuesday and will begin sinking piers for the Illinois highway and railroad approaches as soon as the moneys available for the leasing of caissons and the employment of St. Louis union labor.

Plans Are Completed.

Kinsey has complete plans ready for every step of the construction work, which he proposes to perform directly instead of by contract, when the proper legislation is enacted.

Comptroller Player has decided not to attempt before April 1 a sale of the $2,750,000 of extra bridge bonds authorized at Friday's election. The bond market is in such poor condition today that these securities might go begging even if they bore 4½ per cent interest, which is more than the city has paid on loans in at least 50 years. Player said the bonds will be offered in April on a 4½ per-cent basis.

If the bridge bonds could be sold within the next month, Kinsey said, the city could save $200,000 on the steel required for the two eastern approaches, as steel is selling at an unprecedented low rate now.

The approach of cold weather and the low stage of the river makes it ideal for the sinking of piers through the quicksand on the Illinois shore, Kinsey said, and by the time the $100,000 now on hand is expended in laying this foundation, it is probable the extra bonds will have been marketed and the city may proceed with the superstructure without loss of time.

Open in 18 Months.

Eighteen months will be required to complete the bridge, Kinsey estimated. Before it can be opened for traffic on either deck, about $350,000 must be expended in St. Louis to complete the paving and tracks on the channel spans elevated approaches and the surface extension of the railroad approach along Gratiot street, from Eighth to Twenty-third streets.

The bond issue ordinance adopted Friday is so worded that the $2,750,000 must be spent entirely on the construction of the located highway and railroad approaches in Illinois. City Counselor Baird has ruled that any unexpended balance in this fund must revert to the sinking fund and cannot be used to complete the approaches in St. Louis. This makes it necessary for the Board of Aldermen, which will be elected next April, to appropriate the $350,000 from general revenue.

The total outlay on the bridge, when completed, will be in the neighborhood of $6,600,000, but any saving in the cost of the Illinois approaches will reduce the indebtedness through the operation of the sinking fund.

Obstructionists Repudiated.

Voters, in the bond issue election, repudiated every obstructionist of the 22 in the House of Delegates last January who voted against submission of the bond issue ordinance that was adopted by an overwhelming vote of 89,240 to 13,148.

The 22 obstructionists, all original A. & M. supporters, and the vote of their respective constituents last Friday in passing the bond issue opposed by the delegates, is as follows:

Ward 1, Delegate John E. Klose (R.)—Yes 2491, No 427.

Committee Thanks Post-Dispatch for Help in Election

THE following letter was sent to the Post-Dispatch yesterday by the Citizens' Bridge Committee:

"In behalf of the Citizens' Bridge Committee we as members of its Publicity Committee wish to express our thanks and appreciation for the untiring efforts exerted by you toward the completion of the bridge by a successful bond election.

"The bright sunshine, blowing factory whistles, ringing telephones of yesterday and the big liberal print 'Finish the Bridge' of your and other city dailies during the past six months together wrought the interest and vote which removed the monumental disgrace of St. Louis—an uncompleted city structure.

"The results of yesterday are in line with the marvelous pageant and masque, the up-to-date charter, and all this will result in a newer, greater St. Louis in spirit, growth and business.

PAYS $3 TO GET BUTTONS WORTH $5 FROM CUSTOMS

W. F. Saunders Experiences Difficulty Regaining Articles Left by Wife in Paris.

William F. Saunders, secretary of the Business Men's League, yesterday paid Uncle Sam $3 duty on $5 worth of buttons which Mrs. Saunders bought in St. Louis, but which she had to leave in Paris in her eagerness to return home at the outbreak of the war.

Mrs. Saunders took her jewelry to a Parisian jeweler to be repaired a few days before the war broke out. She left the buttons also with him. When war was declared, there was also declared an extra holiday, which made it impossible for Mrs. Saunders to get her jewelry before she had to leave Paris. She tried to make arrangements to have it sent to her. After much cabling and correspondence, made necessary by the turmoil of war, the package finally arrived here last week.

Saunders went to the customs house to get it. He was advised to employ a broker, but he has had all sorts of dealings with all sorts of people, and thought it would be a simple matter to get a package out of the customs house.

He began by buying several blanks upon which to make claims and declarations. Next he had to go out and find somebody to sign a $200 bond for him. Then he had to make affidavit that the jewelry was purchased in the United States, and finally in the midest of the confusion with which he was confounded he made declaration that the buttons were purchased in France, and that they were worth $5. The duty being 60 per cent, Uncle Sam's agents promptly demanded $3, which he paid.

SECOND BOMB IN TWO WEEKS SHATTERS DOOR

Attempt to Blow Up Ninth Street House Is Repetition of Former Act.

In the second attempt in two weeks to blow up a two-story brick building at 1009 North Ninth street, occupied by Michael Sansoni and several Italian families, a bomb was exploded at the front door at 1:50 o'clock this morning. The door was thrown from its hinges, and splinters of glass flew through a room in which Tony Penze, his wife and three children were sleeping. No one was hurt. The detonation of the bomb attracted an excited crowd into the street.

Michael Sansoni is the father of Tony Sansoni, who was tried three years ago for the murder of Giuseppe Camarata. One of Sansoni's witnesses, Salvatore Leoni, was the victim of a crime known as the "ashpit murder."

SUCH A JOKER IS THAT MR. BAACK, BUT HIS WIFE DOESN'T SEE THE FUN

Only Fooling When He Offered Her a Check for $10,000 to Leave Him—Picture of Another Woman in Valise Also a Prank.

That $10,000 check which Walter E. Baack, president of the Baack, Dyer & Brecht Millinery Co., 1123 Washington avenue, gave to Mrs. Ethel E. Baack, his wife, was a joke, as Baack explained it in giving his deposition yesterday in her divorce suit.

Mrs. Baack, in her petition, filed a week ago, alleged her husband gave her the check to leave him and as an inducement for her to obtain a divorce. They were in the dining room of their home, Baack said, when Mrs. Baack said if he would give her $10,000 she would leave him.

"I wrote her a check for $10,000," he said, "and dated it 1995, or something like that, and told her she could cash it when it came due. I figured that before it came due we would both be dead. It was a joke."

Baack had some difficulty in accounting for $2500 or $3000 which he said he had spent for furniture and silverware. Grant Gillespie, attorney for Mrs. Baack, produced a bill which showed that the furniture purchased when they went to housekeeping cost less than $300. Baack said a great deal of furniture would wear out in seven years and have to be replaced, and he bought the rest as they went along. Then there was the silverware. He thought a good deal of the money went for silverware.

Orange Wrappers for Silverware.

Mrs. Baack whispered to Gillespie and he asked Baack if it was not a fact that his wife had acquired most of the family silverware with orange wrappers. Baack admitted that Mrs. Baack might have used orange wrappers for that purpose. "But that is a very expensive way of buying silverware, I understand," he added.

His wife nagged him and lied to him, Baack said. One night she called him up and told him she was at Mrs. Link's. He called up Mrs. Link's later and was informed that Mrs. Baack had not been there.

The only times he stayed away from home all night, he said, was once when he was weather-bound at Cherokee Garden and a few times when he stayed downtown to take a Turkish bath.

The photograph of a girl that he brought home in his grip from one of his trips was another joke, he explained. He had gone to Beatrice, Neb., to conduct a sale, and a girl in the store there, who was acquainted with Mrs. Baack, had had her photograph taken and she gave him one. He could not recall her name. Mrs. Baack said something in an undertone to Gillespie.

"Yes, Hattie Froelich, that was her name," said Baack; "it comes back to me now that my wife mentions it."

Mrs. Baack promptly denied having mentioned the name, and Baack said, "Well, that was her name, anyhow."

Baack denied he had told his wife that if he had not married her he could have married a rich girl. He laughed unrestrainedly when asked if he had not threatened to kill himself and if he had not oiled his gun for that purpose when he discovered Mrs. Baack had saved $25 out of her month's allowance for the household.

He denied he told her she was a hindrance to his business because if he was single he could take milliners out to dine and wine them as customers. He also denied that when Mrs. Baack snuggled up to him on one occasion he kicked her in the back. That, he said, was a "contemptible lie."

A third joke was the implication, from one of Gillespie's questions, that Baack sometimes went under the name of Erny Buck and had a private mail box under that name at the postoffice. "It's a joke; believe me, it's a joke," said Baack.

He denied he left his wife unprovided for when he went to New York. "I gave her $5," he said. He explained that she was to use this for car fare and theater tickets and pin-money generally.

Baack was asked if he had ever been out with a woman or girl other than his wife during their married life. He said he had not, but if the lawyer meant to ask him if he had been out with a lady, he would say yes. He had taken lady customers out and entertained them, he said.

Mrs. Baack, in her suit for divorce, alleges Baack bought clothes for other women and supported them, and that he called her a parasite because she wanted to accompany him to Union Station when he started on a trip to New York. Mrs. Baack is living with her mother, Dr. Mae S. Harris, 3528 Olive street. Baack lives at the Belcher Hotel. His wife says he is worth $50,000. He has been sending her $20 a month since they separated. The deposition was taken before Herman da Costa.

DAVIS SUGGESTS A NEW SCHEDULE FOR GOLFERS

The municipal golf links in Forest Park have developed an army of golfers, so large that Park Commissioner Davis yesterday requested men and women who are at leisure during the week to do their playing on days other than Saturday and Sunday.

The links have a circumference of five miles, and will accommodate 500 players at a time without crowding, but the past few weeks have witnessed as many as 750 players on the fairway on Saturday afternoons and Sunday.

Davis said a majority of the Forest Park golfers are persons who have time to play only between noon Saturday and Sunday evening.

VINEGAR DEALER IS ARRESTED AS VATS ARE FOUND EMPTY

Harry A. Nelon Issues Receipts Accepted by Banks as Loan Securities.

Harry A. Nelon of 4441 Forest Park boulevard, president of the Avis Cider and Vinegar Co., 1700 Austin street, was arrested last night after C. O. Hodgon, a United States gauger, reported that 11 of the company's vats supposed to contain vinegar for which Nelon had given warehouse receipts, were either empty, or contained water and sediment.

These receipts in some cases had been hypothecated by their holders at banks as security for loans.

An application for a warrant charging embezzlement will be made tomorrow. The arrest was made at the instance of Robert E. Moloney of the law firm of Boyle & Priest, counsel for the Equitable Surety Co., 510 Locust street, and of Frank B. Lord, superintendent of the claim department of the surety company, by which Nelon is bonded for $25,000.

They declared the total receipts issued by Nelon on vinegar supposed to be in storage at his warehouse amounts to at least $28,000; and that of the 11 vats at the plant, as tested by Hodgon, seven are empty, two are partly filled with water, and two contain three feet of liquid sediment.

Two Banks Hold Receipts.

Moloney said the Central National Bank holds Nelon's receipts for 1200 barrels of vinegar, as security for a loan of $4000 made to L. W. Johnson, a broker, and that the State National Bank holds Nelon's receipts for 1400 barrels of vinegar as surety for a loan of $5800 to J. R. Ginn, a stockholder in the Avis concern.

Earlier in the day the surety company filed an attachment suit in the Circuit Court against Nelon for $6000, alleging a claim for this sum had been made upon the Equitable Co. by Johnson, on the ground that Nelon had failed, upon demand, to deliver to Johnson a quantity of vinegar represented by the receipts.

Suspicion against Nelon was aroused yesterday when Ginn and W. W. Henderson, attorney for the Central National Bank, went separately to the warehouse. Admission was denied to Henderson, who wished to consult with Nelon concerning Johnson's note for $4000, which was about to fall due. Ginn said he was unable to see Nelon, but that a bookkeeper, Richard Rumer, informed him, as a stockholder, that there was virtually no vinegar on the premises.

Tanks are Examined.

Henderson and Ginn, after a conference, went to the Equitable offices to see Lord. They summoned Hodgdon and went to the warehouse, where the gauger examined the vats.

Detectives were sent to the plant. A watchman would not let them enter until they displayed their badges. They found Nelon lying on a sofa in his darkened office. Thinking one of the detectives was the watchman, Nelon said: "Put your hand on my head and see how it's throbbing."

The detectives seized his hands instead, whereupon, they said, he attempted to pull open a drawer beside him which contained a revolver. In his pocket were two vials of chloroform. He explained that he was using it as a liniment for headache.

Nelon, who is 34 years old and mar-

BRITISH FORCE FROM INDIA TAKES TURKISH PERSIAN GULF PORT

Capture of German Cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau by Japanese Is Reported From Peru—German Aggressions in Africa Expected to Hasten Portugal Into War.

LATEST WAR NEWS IN BRIEF

WESTERN—German attacks are renewed along the whole front, indicating a revival of the desperate attempt to gain the French seascoast, with the expected support, a few days hence, of troops now said to be on the way from the eastern theater of war. Both sides claim slight advantages.

EASTERN—The Russian advance into East Prussia continues, and the retreating German and Austrian armies are separated by large Russian forces. The removal of troops to the west is accounted for only on the theory that the Germans and Austrians hope to intrench themselves in strong positions, where they can hold the enemy back, even with a reduced force.

TURKISH—Black Sea ports were bombarded by the Russian fleet. The Turks seized English and French steamers in the Smyrna roadstead. The Turkish port of Fao, in the Persian Gulf, has been occupied by a British military and naval force from India.

NAVAL—The capture of two German cruisers, said to be the Scharnhorst and the Gneisenau, by a Japanese squadron in the Pacific, is reported from Lima, Peru, but is thus far without official confirmation.

JAPANESE—The capture of Tsing-Tau has released a large Japanese force, and it is believed that Japan will now inaugurate a vigorous naval campaign, policing the Pacific against her enemies.

By ASSOCIATED PRESS.

LIMA, Peru, Nov. 7.—It is reported here that a Japanese squadron cruising along the coast of Peru has captured the German cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau.

TOKIO, Nov. 8, 9:30 a. m.—A well-authenticated report is in circulation here that the Japanese Admiralty has received information that a battle in the Pacific Ocean between the Japanese and German fleets is impending. No indication has been given as to the present whereabouts of either the Japanese or the German men-of-war.

Revived German Offensive Met by Fierce Resistance on Whole Lin

PARIS, Nov. 8, 1 a. m.—The Germans are showing renewed acti from the Yser to the Moselle, indicating, it is believed here, their inten ion to begin another great effort for victory. The battle around Ypres cont with undiminished fury, but as the allies continue to take the initiativ , the advantage rests with them.

North of Ypres, that is, between it and Dixmude, neither side appears to be making any great efforts, and no decisive result has been achieved. It is in the direction of Roulers and the Lys that the enemy is now operating with all the forces at his disposal, with the object of driving the allies back on Boulogne. The allies now hold the advantage on their center and right wing. In this direction the extreme German positions are at Wytschaete and Messines, facing west.

Running from Kemmel toward the Lys, the hills rise to a height of 400 feet above sea level, and dominating positions near Kemmel are in the hands of the allies. The valley of the Lys, through which the Germans are advancing, is only 50 feet above sea level, so that the allies have the benefit of stronger ground.

The struggle in the valley of the Scarpe continues with unabated intensity. The Germans still are making desperate efforts against Arras, and at times shells have fallen into the city at the rate of 82 to the minute. But the French lines are established so skillfully, making every possible use of the hils on the west and the small Rivers Crinchon and Scarpe, which flow nearby, that the Germans, despite renewed attacks, have failed to make any impression on them. French artillery, from well-chosen positions, sweeps the plain over which the Germans are obliged to advance.

The latest German operations in the Argonne Forest and on the plains of the Woevre District are part of a scheme to invest Verdun. This struggle to isolate the great fortress of the Meuse extends over a vast region. The actions on the heights east of the river and around Mihiel are a part of this campaign. The French, however, are fully alive to the importance of the situation there, and are taking the offensive with success at several points.

British-Indian Force Takes Fao; Russians Press On Into Prussia

LONDON, Nov. 8, 12:30 a. m.—The Admiralty announces the occupation of Fao, a port of Asiatic Turkey, on the Persian Gulf. Fao is the terminus of the submarine telegraph to India.

A military force from India, covered by the sloop Odin, landed with a naval detachment after the Turkish guns had been silenced, according to the announcement. There were no British casualties.

A dispatch received by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. from Berlin indicates that Germany considers Portugal an enemy, though there has been no declaration of war. The dispatch says:

"It is reported that the revolution kindled by German emissaries in the Portuguese colony of Angola, West Africa, is spreading. The colony's troops are insufficient to defend the southern frontier against German attacks, and a brigade of troops is being sent from Portugal."

With the exception of the fall of Tsingtau, the most significant report from any of the battle fronts, and the most welcome from the allies' point of view, is that the Russian armies, besides driving the Austrians back in Galicia, have reached the Warthe River in Russian Poland and established themselves on the East Prussian frontier.

In fact, the Berlin official report says, some Russian cavalry crossed the Warthe, but were driven back. To this the Russian report adds that the town of Warta, on the Warthe River in Poland, has been occupied, and that a German column has proceeded westward through Czenstochowa, which is very near the Silesian frontier.

The Russians, too, are responsible for the report that they have defeated the Germans near Miawa, in Poland, just across the East Prussian boundary, and at Lyck, in East Prussia.

Military observers here say the Russians have followed the retiring Germans at a very much faster pace than was anticipated, and that if they are in force, they may be able to prevent the Germans from taking up their new positions on the Warthe, and compel them to fall back to the Silesian border.

Despite all this, reports persist that the Germans are sending large numbers of their troops who have been fighting in Poland westward, to oppose the allies in France and Belgium. That they would do this, with enormous Russian forces threatening their own and richest territory, military men here say seems highly improbable, unless the Germans are satisfied that a reduced force can prevent the Russians from entering Silesia and East Prussia.

Proclamation Explains Evacuation Along the Yser.

Wiring from Amsterdam, the correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co. says that the German authorities at Bruges have placed a proclamation on the front of the town hall, stating that the German army has evacuated its position on the Yser in order to open a strong attack on Ypres, where the troops are slowly progressing.

At Gitz, Roulers, Lichtervelds and Thourout (towns in west Flanders) as well as in other villages to the east of the fighting line, great movements of German troops can be observed. Exhausted soldiers are returning from the battle fields, while fresh troops are advancing in the direction of Ypres and Dixmude.

The fighting between these two cities is still extremely severe and both sides appear to have suffered terrible losses. Long columns of cars filled with the wounded are arriving at Bruges from Roulers, Ypres and Ingelmunster.

Heavy Guns Being Mounted at Ostend.

Engineers from the Krupp gun works are mounting heavy guns at the Belgian seaport of Ostend, and facing them seaward, according to a dispatch from Rotterdam to the Exchange Telegraph Co.

With the fighting at Tsingtau at an end, the question is raised what will Japan do next. It is suggested that she will inaugurate an offensive naval campaign on the Pacific, employing the fleet released from the bombardment of Tsingtau in an attempt to run down the German warships which have wrought such havoc to British shipping in this ocean and defeated the British fleet off Chile.

Germans Blow Up Forts, Town and Ships, Before Tsingtau Surrender

TOKIO, Nov. 7.—After desperate assaults in which the Japanese, in the face of heroic resistance, rivaled the bravery of their forces at Port Arthur, Tsingtau surrendered at 9:20 o'clock this morning. At that hour Gov. Meyer Waldeck, following the hoisting of white flags on the forts, sent an officer with a flag of truce to the Anglo-Japanese lines. At 4 o'clock this afternoon the Japanese and German officers opened a conference at Moltke Barracks, where the formalities of capitulation were concluded.

The Japanese officers pay unstinted tribute to the bravery of the Germans, who fought tenaciously to the last. Unofficial reports are that the Germans blew up what was left of their forts before surrendering, and virtually the whole town is in ruins. A Japanese torpedo boat flotilla that entered the bay found that nearly all the ships had been destroyed.

An official estimate places the Japanese killed in the final assault last night at 36, with 182 wounded. The British took an important part in the victory and two British officers were wounded. No statement of the German casualties is available but it is believed that they were heavy.

6000 Prisoners to Be Taken to Japan.

The Minister of War states that the lessons learned from the siege were, first, the destructiveness of the new heavy guns that the Japanese used for the first time; and, second the effectiveness of the aeroplane observation service, whereby the methods of the defense were discovered. The prisoners, who will number, it is stated, between 6000 and 8000, will be brought to Japan.

The official version of the Anglo-Japanese victory, issued by the Japanese War Office, reads:

"A general bombardment on Oct. 31 permitted the occupation on Nov. 1, of the first attacking position—36.5 Metre hill, 3000 feet south of our previous position and bounded by the Shi-Ho and the Shunkas-Ho.We entrenched and prepared for a further advance, and on Nov. 4 we progressed to a second position at Pempuga on the Fusaus-Ho, where we met a galling fire, yet never flinched. The heavy artillery moved closer and co-operated with and protected the infantry.

"On the night of Nov. 6 we occupied the third and final attacking position in front of the entanglements that screened the forts. Gen. Yoshimi Yamada's command advanced from the center and forced its way through three heavily wired defenses, crossed the intervening ditches, and, charging courageously, captured the center fort. This helped Gen. Horiuchi to occupy the northerly fort.

"The right wing under Gen. Yohoyi and the British right center led by Lieut.-Col. Bernardiston jointly charged and early on Nov. 7 occupied Forts Iltis, Moltke and Bismarck, forcing the enemy to fly flags of surrender."

Vice-Minister of the Navy Suzuki, speaking today of the future of Tsingtau, said:

"While the European war continues Tsingtau will be administered by Japan. At the conclusion of the war Japan will open negotiations with China."

Other details of the Tsingtau fighting reaching Tokio show that the Germans made desperate efforts to repair the damages to their batteries, but without success. Japanese shells killed the men at work and demolished the batteries anew. Projectiles from the Japanese warships started fires in several streets of the city, certain portions of which were burned.

The stopping of the smuggling of provisions along the Langshan coast is thought to have hastened the capitulation of the German stronghold.

After the capture of the central fort, it appears from the Japanese reports, the left wing of the attacking forces advanced and occupied Chanshan at 5:10 o'clock yesterday morning. Chanshan was the base of the right wing of the German line and is a triangular fortification. Then the other forces, at the point of the bayonet, captured the forts of the first line, including the intricate and dangerous defense works connecting them. Other forces advanced in rushes on the main line of defenses made up of the forts of Iltis, Bismarck and Moltke.

"Suddenly," say the reports, "the flag of surrender ran up in the morning breeze on the weather bureau mount, towering above the sea and land."

In the last two days of the fighting the warships continued a terrific rain of shells on the fortress and the city from the east and south, inflicting great damage and havoc. Taisichen fort, the official accounts say, seemed to explode.

The charge against the middle fort was a brilliant one. It was led by Gen. Yoshimi Yamada at the head of companies of infantry and engineers.

Russian Shells Sink a Greek Steamer

LONDON, Nov. 7.—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram Co. from Amsterdam brings the following statement by the Turkish army headquarters, received from Constantinople by way of Berlin:

"The Russian army showed no activity on Friday.

"This morning the Russian fleet bombarded the Black Sea ports, Zunguldiak and Kuzlu, for two hours. At Kuzlu the Greek steamer Nikoa was sunk. At Zunguldiak the French church and the French consulate were destroyed."

The following official report from the Turkish army headquarters in Constantinople was received here tonight from Berlin by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co.:

"On the eastern frontier our troops are in touch with the enemy along the entire front.

"In the roads of Smyrna three large English ships and several English and French steamers have been seized."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The Russian embassy tonight received a supplementary statement to the official report given out in Petrograd, which says: "In the Black Sea our fleet bombarded the Turkish port of Sanguidak and sank four Turkish transports, three with supplies of clothing for the Turkish army and one presumably with troops."

French Take Trenches, Win in Bayonet Charges on the Meuse

PARIS, Nov. 7 (10:45 p. m.).—The French official communication issued tonight says:

"Today the activity of the Germans has been general on the whole front, but all their attacks have been repulsed, notably those which they directed on Cambrin, Aix-Noulette and La Quesnoy-en-Santerre.

"We have taken a few trenches in the region of Thiepval, at the north of Albert, re-occupied our former trenches at the northeast of Vailly, and taken at the point of the bayonet the village of St. Remi on the heights of the Meuse."

This afternoon's official communication was:

"On our left wing the situation is relatively quiet on the Yser downstream from Dixmude. The Belgian troops, who advanced along the right bank of the Yser from Nieuport in the direction of Lombaertzyde and who had been counter-attacked by the Germans, were sustained in time. The situation has been entirely re-established in this locality.

"At Dixmude the marine fusilliers repulsed a fresh counter offensive movement. Further to the south the attacks of the enemy around Dixschoote also were repulsed by French troops, who subsequently advanced. To the east of Ypres the situation is without change. To the southeast of this town we have resumed the offensive in combination with the British troops operating in this region and repulsed an attack particularly violent and pronounced by detachments belonging to the active army corps recently brought into this region by the Germans.

British Repulse an Attack.

"Between Armentieres and the Canal of La Bassee, the British army, on its side, repulsed a violent attack on Neuve Chapelle. Between the Canal of La Bassee and Arras, as well as between Arras and the Oise, several counter-attacks, delivered by night and day have been checked. We even made some slight progress in the region of Vermelles and to the south of Aix-Noulette.

"On the center, in the region of Vailly, we continued during the day of yesterday to recapture ground previously lost by us. In the Argonne fresh attacks on the part of the enemy were repulsed and at the end of the day our troops made progress at several points.

"To the northeast of Verdun we have taken possession of the villages of Haucourt and of Nogeville.

"In the wooded region along the heights of the Meuse, southeast of Verdun and in the forest of Apremont, southeast of St. Mihiel, the offensive movements of the enemy failed. Some trenches in the vicinity of St. Remi were carried by our troops.

Heavy Losses on German Left.

"On our right wing the attacks of the Germans on the advanced positions of the Grand Couronne of Nancy (the circle of fortified positions surrounding Nancy) resulted in perceptible losses for the enemy. A surprise attack undertaken by the enemy against the heights which dominate Mount Sainte Marie, resulted in complete failure."

Germans Progress Towards Ypres

BERLIN, via London, Nov. 7.—The following official communication was given out at German army headquarters this afternoon:

"In the eastern arena of the war three divisions of Russian cavalry which crossed the River Warthe above Kolo were defeated and pushed back across the stream. There have not been any encounters elsewhere.

"Our attack in the direction of Ypres yesterday also progressed favorably, especially southwest of Ypres. Over 1000 French soldiers and three machine guns were captured.

"The French attacks west of Noyon, Vailly and Chavonne were repulsed with severe losses to the enemy.

"The village of Soupir, which had been defended by a small German force, and the western part of Sapigneul, which was heavily bombarded by French artillery, were evacuated by us.

"French attacks near Servon were repulsed and in the Argonnes the French were forced back."

Russians Masters of Black Sea; Austrians Cut Off From Germans

ROME, Nov. 7.—According to a telegram from Odessa, the Russians consider themselves absolute masters of the Black Sea. The Turkish fleet, it is declared, has retired behind the Bosphorus and does not seem disposed to come out.

A special dispatch to the Tribuna from Petrograd says:

"The Russians have cut off the Austrian army from the Germans. The Austrians were encircled on their left flank and compelled to retreat precipitately, and Thursday the Russians, with a swift movement, occupied all the ways of retreat toward Cracow, and thus the entire Austrian army was pushed toward the Carpathian Mountains, against which the Austrians are closely pressed.

Snow Hinders the Austrians.

"Their only line of retreat lies across the Carpathians into Hungary. But the Carpathians at this time of the year and with the recent snowfalls are almost impassable to 1,500,000 men, with provisions, munition trains and artillery.

"Petrograd is rejoicing over the present victory. Great demonstrations have been held at which the army, Grand Duke Nicholas, the Commander-in-Chief, and Emperor Nicholas were cheered, and in all the churches services to celebrate the event also have taken place.

"Emperor Nicholas remains at the front."

Austrians Falling Back Along Whole Front to Strong Position.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 7.—The Austrians are in full retreat over the entire Galician front. The movement is such as to indicate less a general defeat than a general obedience to orders to withdraw. The Russians have been pressing with great energy upon the Upper Vistula and San fronts, especially since the settlement of the main fight farther north against the German and mixed forces.

The Austrians will retire to an especially strong fortified position resting on Cracow on the south and Kalisch on the north. These places are 70 miles apart. The object of making a stand here is to prevent the Russians from attempting to turn the line of defense of Germany along the border. If successful resistance is maintained here, Germany will be free to throw the greater part of the armies which invaded Poland back to the western front in an effort to crush the Anglo-French defense.

These forces, in spite of the Polish defeats, will be considerable in number and valuable in quality. When retiring, after the failure before Warsaw, the Germans planted a heavy rear guard to fight their battles and succeeded in getting their troops away with comparatively small losses. In fact, they secured 24 hours' start, and, by this time, doubtless, have got back into Germany, still in good fighting condition, and possibly are already proceeding towards France.

On the East Prussian front the Germans continue to retire along the whole line, the Russians following them closely.

The general opinion in the army is that the Germans will attempt to make a stand at their fortified positions behind the River Tarma, a few miles inside the frontier of Poland, but that the Russians will drive them out and that the real stand will be made along the line of the Oder and the fortresses of Cracow, Breslau, Gaudenz and Thorn, in which case the Russian task will be difficult.

There is an impression that Russia is piling up numbers at the front only in proportion as her mobilization reaches the more and more distant regions of the vast empire. This is altogether wrong. Russia maintains a large army at all times, and, since the Japanese war, it has become a new army in many senses. The Grand Duke, Nicholas takes to the front forces sufficient for the purpose of his strategic plan. Behind these and within easy reach are others ready to fill the gaps in the fighting line. They constitute a second army, while in distant provinces yet another army is being polished up. Ever since the war began a continual flow in regular sequence has been taking place, and thus the fighting front is always kept up to the full strength.

The idea that mobilization in Russia means that every ablebodied man is enrolled in the active army as fast as possible is ridiculous. This would bring 20,000,000 men at least into the field and Russia does not want so many.

Vienna Reports Capture of 15,000 Servians and Four Cannon.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—An official statement issued in Vienna and reaching here by way of Amsterdam, says:

"On the 7th, in the southern war theater, attacks made against the enemy, strongly fortified behind barbed wire entanglements in the district of Companie and south of Spabats, are progressing slowly. The strategically important heights of Misar were captured and 200 prisoners taken.

"Together with these operations we began yesterday an attack on the position near Kroupani, 62 miles southwest of Belgrade. Yesterday some Servian entrenchments were stormed and 15,000 prisoners, four cannon and six machine guns were taken."

Conspicuous Emblems Removed to Save German Officers

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 7.—With a view of decreasing the loss of officers in the German army, all their conspicuous emblems have been removed, their silver badges being replaced by leather straps. When in battle the officers carry a rifle only, no longer bearing a pistol and sword.

WAR CONTRACT RUMORED TO HAVE LED TO FIRE

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Nov. 7.—An investigation is under way to determine the cause of fire which destroyed the plant of the Hermann-Sanford Saddlery Co. here today with a loss estimated at $265,000.

Police officials seem inclined to place some credence in a report that a contract held by the firm to manufacture $200,000 worth of cavalry saddles and artillery harness for the British army is indirectly responsible for the conflagration.

1598 English Officers Now Dead, Wounded or Missing

LONDON, Nov. 7.—A list of the casualties among commissioned officers in the various regiments composing the British expeditionary force in France between Oct. 20 and Oct. 27 raises the total of officers killed, wounded or missing to 1598.

Among the regiments to suffer heavily were the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, who lost seven officers killed, eight wounded and two missing, and the Royal Field Artillery, 10 of whose officers were wounded.

Forty officers killed were English, two Irish, nine Welsh, and two Scotch. Of the wounded 109 were English, 13 Irish, nine Welsh and eight Scotch. Of the officers reported as missing 10 were English, 13 Irish, two Welsh and one Scotch.

WAR SHOWS HOW EASILY WE REVERT TO BARBARISM, SAYS HISTORIAN FERRERO

Noted Italian Says Lawless Acts Reflect Tendency of Modern Times in Industry, Commerce and Finance.

By Guglielmo Ferrero
(the Noted Italian Historian).

ROME, Oct. 19.—After provoking the European conflagration, Germany seems to glory in the war without law, violating the international treaties and the rights of nations and offending the sentiments of which our civilization is most proud.

Not satisfied with having violated Belgium's neutrality, Germany sows mines all over the neutral seas, sinking the mercantile ships of neutral nations, sends over hostile cities aeroplanes and Zeppelins laden with bombs to murder women and children, levies war tributes, burns villages, shells open cities, shoots hostages, sets on fire the Louvain library and the Rheims cathedral.

Soldiers' View of His Duty.

But this is not sufficient to justify us in regarding the German officers as modern vandals. No, they are merely soldiers; brought up to the idea that the German army's duty is that of defeating its enemy, with the sacrifice, if necessary, of their life; and, at the same time, that the officer is the only judge of the safest and best means to insure the final victory. Judges, moralists, artists, members of the Red Cross and of The Hague International Tribune must stand aside.

If, in order to win, the army regards as necessary the violation of neutral territories, the trampling upon of international protocols, the burning of cities and villages, the shooting of hostages, the levying of tributes on innocent persons, the destruction of artistic monuments—well, the army has the right to do it, because all these evils are as nothing compared to the supreme evil—the defeat.

Naturally, the ultimate effects of this principle are terrible. What will happen when you leave in a hostile country a huge army whose officers are imbued with this spirit? The logical consequence is that every officer will consider himself, according to his rank, the judge of what he deems is his duty and his right to do in order to insure the victory regardless, of any law and limitation.

Imagine what the badly or well understood patriotism, the ambition to distinguish one's self, the spirit of emulation, the national hatred, the exasperation brought about by the danger and the struggle, can suggest, amid the confusion and the turmoil of battles, to men whose temperament and culture are so different. It will even be possible to find some unfortunate who believes himself in good faith to have rendered a service to Germany by bombarding the Rheims cathedral.

But, if the effects of the principle are terrible, is the principle in itself such as to appear monstrous or extravagant to the men of the twentieth century? Is it not the very principle that regulates the conduct of most peaceful bankers, manufacturers and merchants? Their business in society is to increase the wealth of their country. Now, among the means employed by them, there are some which, though not destructive and deadly as those used by the German officers for annihilating their foes, are, nevertheless, dangerous and immoral.

The moralists, the ministers and some political parties have for more than a century been accusing the industrial class with having broken up the home, with having caused, under certain aspects, the degeneration of the people's character, with having propagated certain vices, such, for instance, as alcoholism. Not without reason the industrial class is accused by the hygienists with ruining the health of the working class, and by the artists of spoiling, when not altogether destroying, the natural beauties of the country, ancient cities and monuments.

Gas House on Historic Ruins.

Historical monuments have been destroyed in Italy to make place for gas houses, railroads and street cars. In Rome the gas house rises from among the ruins of the Circus Maximus.

And I shall not say much of modern finance, whose methods are known to be not altogether scrupulous. From every side are laws invoked to confine the evil; but the industrial class thwarts every effort; the manufacturers maintain that any limitation would reduce the production of wealth and consequently impoverish the country, and that the evils denounced are preferable to poverty—which is the worst of evils.

Now, is this not the very sentiment wherewith the German officials have gone to war? Is not the industrial class determined to produce wealth in the same way that the officers want to conduct their war; that is, without law, with the least possible number of restrictions and limitations to hinder them, both proceeding straightway to their coveted goal—success?

The world has ample reasons for being frightened at what is happening on the battlefields of Europe, but it ought to reflect also that the danger of returning to barbarism is so evident that everybody has become aware of it and that it lurks insidiously, and for this reason is more dangerous, even in time of peace, in industry, commerce and finance.

"BUY-A-BALE" LIST SENT TO MISS ANNE MORGAN

New York Woman Plans to Aid Working Girls and Send Clothes to War Sufferers.

Miss Anne Morgan of New York, daughter of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, in furtherance of her plan to furnish clothing for soldiers and other European war sufferers and to provide work for unemployed women in New York, has written to Flint Garrison of 5835 Bartmer avenue, publisher of "The Drygoodsman," for a list of persons who bought $230,000 worth of cotton through the buy-a-bale committee of the St. Louis Business Men's League.

Miss Morgan will send a letter to these cotton buyers asking them to give their certificates to her. She will ask cotton-goods manufacturers to accept these certificates in exchange for their value in cotton cloth and will then employ New York girls, now out of employment, to make the cloth into garments to be sent to Europe.

The list was furnished by Secretary Saunders of the Business Men's League and has been sent to Miss Morgan. About 4600 bales of cotton have been purchased through the local committee at $50 a bale, of which 1500 bales have been received and stored in St. Louis.

Vinegar Dealer Is Arrested as Vats Are Found Empty

ried, told reporters at police headquarters that the total warehouse receipts issued by him amount only to $14,300, and that there is enough vinegar in the tanks of the Avid company to meet this obligation twice over, besides 5000 gallons of cider. He declared the gauger found only 11 vats in the company's yard and missed 28 tanks in the warehouse itself.

These tanks, he said, are each of 30,000 gallons' capacity, and are on an average two-thirds filled.

He complained that the surety company was unfair in causing his arrest before making a demand on him for the vinegar in question. Had it done so, he maintained, he could have convinced the Equitable officials that his concern was solvent. Nelon said he took over the affairs of the Avis company 14 years ago, when he was 19 years old.

LUNCHES WITH WIFE; SENDS HER GOODBY NOTE

Mrs. Noah Asbridge of Salem, Mo., visiting her mother at 4548A Page boulevard, was downtown with her husband all yesterday morning, and left him soon after lunch to return to her mother's home. Late in the afternoon she received this special delivery letter from him:

"My Dear Wife: Please forgive me. Am sorry I have ruined your life. You have been good, too. Please collect my insurance and pay my debts and then you will have plenty to live on. You need not hunt for my body, as it will never be found. Please forgive me. Good-by. I love you. NOAH."

The letter was written on the stationery of the Merchants' Hotel, Twelfth and Olive streets. It was postmarked at 3:30 p. m. Mrs. Asbridge sent it to the Deer Street Police Station by a messenger.

Employes at the hotel said a man answering Asbridge's description wrote a letter there soon after noon. They said he was not a guest at the hotel, and departed immediately.

SPORT OF HUNTING RELIEVES STRAIN OF BRITISH LIFE IN THE TRENCHES

BIG GERMAN SHELLS FALL AROUND SHIPS, BUT DON'T HIT THEM

Post-Dispatch Correspondent, Through British Sailor's Admiration for Bob Edgren's Sport Writings, Is Permitted to View Wonderful Flanders Battle From Sand Dune.

By ARNO DOSCH,

Special Correspondent of the New York World and the Post-Dispatch With the British Army.

(Copyright by the Press Publishing Co.)

FLEUROT, Flanders, Nov. 7.—Because I work for the same papers as Robert Edgren, sporting writer of the New York World and the Post-Dispatch, I had an unusual point of vantage for seeing the English navy bombard the German trenches in sand dunes between Nieuport and Westende.

There was a captive balloon operated by the flying corps of the English navy on the highest sand dune. I wanted to get up on the dune, so I could see better, and I wanted to see the men in the balloon semaphore the ships, telling them where to shoot, but a young English sailor who was a member of the flying corps stopped me until I happened to mention I worked for the World and the Post-Dispatch.

"Do you know Bob Edgren?" he surprised me by asking. It was hardly a question you would expect to be asked on the Belgian sand dunes, in the midst of one of the most remarkable battles in the world's history. I claimed Edgren's acquaintance, and that was better than a military pass.

Liked Edgren's Stuff.

We climbed the sand dune together, he telling me how much he admired Edgren as a sporting writer. It seems he had been in Newport News, Va., once. He thought Edgren was fair in his judgment of English pugilists. So we stood on the sand dune, he discoursing on Edgren, while I watched the men in the balloon signal to someone in a wireless station nearer shore, who, it was explained to me, was letting the gunners at sea know the range.

All you could see, even from the top of this highest sand dune, were rolling sand dunes to the east, and an occasional belch of smoke, showing where a German gun was hidden. The moment the smoke began to dissipate, you could no longer make out behind which one of the sand dunes that gun was placed. Up in the balloon they knew, however, and the English cruisers were tearing into the sand dunes in a way that made me think they were getting results.

The German guns did not seem to diminish, though I learned later the cruisers had demolished one battery of three big guns.

Didn't Hit Cruisers.

The cruisers, sailing in a circle, kept steaming by at half speed, firing steadily, guns flashing flaming tongues, three seconds before we got the reports. The Germans were compelled to shoot in the air, hoping to drop enormous shells on the decks of the cruisers. If one had ever struck, I believe it would have wrecked whatever it hit, but the shells fell all around the cruisers and never touched them.

Inland, there was no making out anything except the course of the Yser, with shells breaking everywhere. Nieuport was catching most of these, and none was falling our way, until suddenly a shrapnel shell broke right over us, and all about us buzzed with dropping missiles.

Immediately there was another, a little closer to the balloon overhead, and in less than a minute the balloon was pulled down. Out of it stepped two young members of the flying corps, a little relieved to be out of range of shrapnel.

The first thing my friend, the sailor, said to them was:

"What d' you think; this fellow works for the same paper as Bob Edgren?"

The funny part of it is, I have never met Bob Edgren.

British Hunt Partridges Behind Firing Line; Class Lines Persist

By ARNO DOSCH.

(By Mail to the Post-Dispatch.)

ON THE AISNE, NORTHEASTERN RANCE, Oct. 26.—German shells were opping here and there in a field I as crossing the other day, within the ne of German fire on the Aisne, and was hurrying to get out of their range, hen I was brought to a dead stop by lf a dozen rapid shots just across a tle neck of woods.

I was the only person for miles wear- g ordinary civilian clothes, and I was some danger of being taken for a y and shot out of hand, so I waited thout taking a step to see what de- loped. Shortly w could hear men eaking through the woods, headed wards me, and I felt certain I was for something, though I had no idea hat it would be.

n a moment they appeared, two En- sh officers with shotguns, and be- nd them their soldier-servants, or ikers, as we would call them. They re carrying the partridges the offi- s had been shooting. They had three ir.

Rotten luck," said one of the offi- s. "These infernal shells have the ds so wild you can't get anywhere ar them."

'Why don't you shoot over in the lley out of range of the German ns?" I asked.

"The Tenth Hussars are billeted down ere," he replied, "and that's their eserve. We had good shooting up re for awhile until they began to shell again, but you can hardly find a bird w."

Got Guns From Mayor.

I asked them where they got thei ns, and they said they had comman- ered them from the Mayor of the all town in which they were stay- . Before the Germans came through at country the Mayors had ordered firearms delivered to them, together th ammunition, and, when the En- ish army settled down for its long mpaign on the Aisne, the officers of mmands held in reserve, took the ns and went out after partridges and easants. The birds were plentiful, , I noticed, indicating that this coun- y is held under preserve in ordinary nes by the owners of the chateaux attered along the beautiful valley of e Aisne.

An officer I saw another day told me e had sent into Paris for a shotgun nd was providing his mess with game very day. He was on a General's staff nd detailed to see that the General's able was well supplied. As part of his job he had bought the gun and 1000 rounds of cartridges.

Back of the British lines for several miles you could hear shotguns constantly during the fine weather in the early part of October, and soldiers' ears became accustomed to telling the difference between the fire of shotguns and rifles, although recruits sometimes got a scare.

It is pretty hard for an American to understand the unbridgable gap between the officer and the enlisted men in the British army. They both seem to thrive under it, but it is too undemocratic for us. "Tommy Atkins" wants discipline and license. He is perfectly willing to be knocked about. In fact, he seems to prefer it. But he does not want his officer around seeing to his comfort and at the same time preventing him from stealing chickens and misbehaving himself in matters he considers his own business.

It is part of the general class system of England under which it seems to go along so cheerfully. A private for instance calls himself a "Tommy" in speaking to you about himself, just as a Londoner may describe himself as belonging to the lower middle class.

When I learned how they behaved, and after seeing them myself in the trenches and under constant fire, their servility was beyond my understanding. Here were men who had proved their right to that title, but they were willing to consider themselves something less, just "Tommies." The Sergeants, the backbone of the British army, showed a little more personal dignity, but they, too, feel the line between Sergeant and Lieutenant to be harder to cross than the Aisne at Vailly.

Quite a number of Sergeants have been promoted to Lieutenancies on the field, but they feel uncomfortable. I will say this: The other officers rise to the occasion and never let them feel the distinction, for, after all, the average English officer is really a gentleman. But the elevated Sergeants can't get used to it. They feel they are out of their class, and that is a tragedy for an Englishman.

I have also been told the "Tommies" resent it. They don't want to be led by a man who has risen from the ranks. They want a "gentleman." So the new Lieutenants wander around by themselves and are only really happy when they have a chance to fraternize with Sergeants.

Class Distinction Hampers Hospital Work.

Class distinction interferes with the efficiency of the British service in another respect. On that account the hospital service is not up to the mark. A British rail-end hospital would be too much for an American nurse to bear. She would take charge and set things to rights in a way that would give English nurses and orderlies a new idea of how a hospital, no matter how temporary, should be run.

I don't mean to criticize the doctors or the "body snatchers," as the soldiers call the members of the Royal Army Medical Corps, who go out into the field and risk their lives to bring in the wounded. It goes deeper than individuals. I have never seen an ordinary English hospital, but I can imagine what its faults must be from seeing the same things exaggerated in the army.

The chief trouble with them is that the nurses are evidently from the servant class. They regard themselves as servants and act like the average English servant. They have not the fine quality of sympathy you so often see in American nurses. They handle their patients with the same brisk roughness a chambermaid uses in making a bed. I have seen many a wounded British soldier wince under the hands of an English nurse.

The doctors also treat the nurses like servants. I have talked to them about it, but few of them have caught what I was driving at. With us the nurse is an individual, a person to be respected. Doctors treat them courteously and as equals. Nothing like that with an English nurse. She is on the level with the orderlies, and the orderlies come decidedly from the "lower classes."

Wounded Briton Eats Heartily.

I cannot let the doctors off entirely, however. I had a chance to see a hospital where the more seriously wounded were being kept. It was tea time, and every mother's son of them, evidently regardless of his condition, was getting his tea with bread and jam.

I saw another case, though, that beat that. A man was lying in a field hospital with three bullet wounds. One had healed, another was still looking angry, and the third was in the abdomen. The bullet had not gone through and was inside somewhere and painful. But he was able to sit up a little and eat his lunch. I would have expected to find him on the lightest of liquid diets, but this is what he was eating: Bread, potatoes, "bully beef," cheese and ale. He had a sizable hunk of cheese, too.

I was struck by the small number of supposed German atrocities I heard about in the country where the fighting has gone on, the country where the atrocities would have been committed, if anywhere. Those I did hear about I was unable to substantiate.

The "Tommies," of course, gave me an earful. They let their imaginations ramble and did pretty well when it came to lurid details, but they were obviously lying. One "Tommy" gave me a very circumstantial account of how a German soldier had bayoneted a woman. "It was awful, sir," he said, "to see that young woman with the bayonet still in her breast."

I wonder how that German soldier ever explained to his officers what had become of his bayonet.

A number of soldiers told me of a town where six young women had been attacked and one of them had become insane. I learned the name of the town, and took pains to go through it and see how much truth there was in the tale. No one in the town had ever heard of it.

The townspeople in one place, however, told me that a German soldier had attacked a woman there, whereupon he was courtmartialed and shot. I asked many officers whether they had seen any mutilated bodies, and not one of them had.

Turning Movement by British 'Drys' Against Rum as an Army Ration

LONDON, Nov. 7.

RUM as an army ration is severely condemned by the United Kingdom Alliance, a prohibition organization, which is working for a rumless army.

Opinions vary as to the need of rum as a ration. The conventional charge against alcohol is that it gives only a fleeting sensation of warmth and is of no real assistance against either cold or fatigue. Dr. W. H. Workman, the distinguished Himalayan explorer, believes a certain amount of liquor induces the stomach in times of great fatigue to begin its work of digesting food, which, when assimilated, builds up the system again. This view is largely shared by the army medical men.

Death Toll Exaggerated, Says U. S. Army Officer

He Says Bystander in Street Row Is in More Danger of Being Hit Than a Soldier on the Battlefield in Europe.

By Wire From the Washington Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—"The innocent bystander runs much greater risk of being injured when cobblestones are flying in the ordinary rough and tumble street fight than the average soldier runs of being shot in the European war, notwithstanding the fact that he is supposed to be subjected to constant fire from the most mechanically perfect killing apparatus."

This statement was made by a staff officer of the United States army this afternoon in commenting on a tour of inspection, made by staff officers, of specimens of the various classes of trenches used in the European war. Trenches have been made at Belvoir, a reservation about twenty miles down the Potomac, where the troops stationed in the vicinity of Washington are now mobilized.

For the purpose of thoroughly familiarizing army officers with the kinds of trenches that are being used in Europe and to give the soldiers practice in their construction, the army reservation on the Potomac has been turned into a miniature battlefield.

"The reports concerning the number of men killed in the war to date are unquestionably exaggerated to a degree that is positively ridiculous," said the officer. "If the reports which have reached this country from London concerning the German casualties are true and if the slaughter continues at the rate now alleged, it will take only a few more months to wipe out the entire army of the Kaiser. The same is true of the losses of the allies as reported from Berlin.

"A military expert has intimated that it takes 10,000 rounds of ammunition to kill one soldier. These figures were made on the basis of ammunition used and men killed in the Russian-Japanese War. To the layman they will sound ridiculous, but they are undoubtedly approximately correct.

"The stories of hand-to-hand fighting as a daily experience are likewise untrue. Of course, on a battle line extending 200 miles there are occasional hand-to-hand encounters, but, judging from the experience of American officers during the Spanish War, it is highly probable that the German soldiers rarely see the men they are shooting at."

Scouts Direct Germans by Pictures of Cows on Buildings and Bridges

PARIS, Nov. 7.

CRUDE drawings of cows of varying proportions, some in attitudes of defiance, belligerency or alarm and others in grazing positions, were noticed by French officers during the early days of the campaign on the Aisne. The sketches at first were considered the work of school children, but the frequency with which this subject appeared on walls, buildings and bridges convinced French officers that the system was used by German scouts to direct German armies, and investigation confirmed this view.

The position of the animal's head indicated the direction in which the French troops were to be found, and the size of the animal indicated the importance of the forces. A very small cow meant that the route was not very strongly guarded. A cow in a natural position of defense indicated fortifications in the neighborhood, and the size of the animal their strength and the pose of the head their exact location. A cow whose head was raised indicated that prudence was necessary in exploring the neighborhood.

SNAPSHOT CAUSES ARREST OF CATTLEMAN AS BANDIT

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 7.—A snapshot picture taken by a woman victim whose identity is kept secret has resulted in the arrest of Charles Eppenbach, a well-to-do cattleman of Northwestern Idaho as the bandit who about two months ago held up several stage coaches in Yellowstone National Park and robbed the passengers of money and jewelry valued at $3000.

One hundred and sixty-five persons, consisting mostly of St. Louis, Chicago and Cincinnati sightseers, were victims of the park bandit.

HELD FOR 50-CENT HOTEL BILL AFTER BEING CHASED MILE

Man Flees From Valley Park Pursued by Negro Porter and Guests.

A man who said he was Jesse Hess, 38 years old, of 6154 Etzel avenue, after being chased a mile and a quarter east of Valley Park on the Frisco Railroad track, was arrested yesterday and locked up in the Clayton jail, charged with "obtaining board under false pretenses" by trying to beat a 50-cent lodging bill.

Mrs. Sophia Hodnett, wife of the proprietor of the Hodnett Hotel in Valley Park, said Hess, who was well-dressed, came there Friday night and engaged a room. Next morning, she said, he went downstairs and started away. When she asked him for the 50 cents for his night's lodging he asked her to wait until he went to the livery stable to get his team, but she insisted on being paid first.

Hess, announcing he would get the money, returned upstairs. A few moments later Preston Davis, negro porter, rushed into the office and announced he had seen Hess slip down the stairs with his shoes under his arm, and go out a side door. Richard Longnecker, a special officer, who is a guest at the hotel, his brother, C. H. Longnecker, and five other guests rushed out the door and saw Hess a block away, putting on his shoes.

Hess saw them, too, and ran east on the Frisco tracks. At first he picked up a good lead on the negro porter, leading the pursuers. When they got well out of the town Hess, from time to time, darted out into the weeds along the tracks or into a culvert in an attempt to throw off his pursuers.

"Here he is; there he goes; come on, boys," the negro shouted as he followed the trail and whooped up the chase, urging his cohorts to stay with him. When they had run a mile and a quarter the negro's endurance overcame the speed of Hess, and they came upon the fugitive sitting on the track, out of breath and "all in," to use his own expression.

Hess was unable to give bond. He will have a hearing before Justice of the Peace Brooks Saturday. He said he formerly was employed in the Chemical Building, but refused to say in what capacity. He said he was trying to get away from the hotel because he had no money to pay his bill.

Now Is the Winter of Discontent for British Actor; Alas, Poor Yorick!

LONDON, Nov. 7.

SMALL part actors, stage hands and others are threatened with starvation because of the war, which has hit the theaters and theater folk of the United Kingdom a hard blow.

Whereas in ordinary times there are 400 traveling companies on the road, there are today less than half that number. The darkened streets in London have caused many managers to give matinees daily and night performances twice weekly, thus reversing the long established order, and many theaters have been closed. To the high-salaried actor or actress who has saved for a rainy day the situation is not so serious, but the theater employes need substantial aid at once.

Several relief movements have been started, among them a plan to have a special variety week at the Women's Theater. Well-known actresses and actors will give their services.

'KICK COMMISSION' MEETS TOMORROW TO PLAN ITS WORK

First Official Act Will Be Selection of Secretary to Take the Hard Jolts.

At the City Hall they already are calling it the "Kick Commission," although the new city charter labels it the "Complaint Board." The board, appointed yesterday by Mayor Kiel, will meet tomorrow in the Mayor's office to organize and plan the development of this novel idea in municipal government.

The first order of business will be the appointment of a secretary to take the kicks. The wounded feelings of this harassed and brow-beaten official will be salved with $2500 annually in the shape of salary provided recently by the Municipal Assembly.

He enjoys the sympathies and condolences of many officials before his name is known, for experience teaches that he will have to referee disputes of every variety, from the complaint of the housewife against the neglectful garbage wagon driver, to the resounding charges of the civic delegate who finds the public utility octopi transgressing the law.

Members Serve Without Pay.

The three board members appointed by the Mayor are former State Senator Maurice J. Cassidy, member of the Building Trades Council; Lewis T. Tune, former president of the St. Louis Club, and Hanford Crawford, vice-president of the St. Louis Symphony Society and formerly manager of Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney.

The board members must embrace the axiom that virtue is its own reward, because they will have to serve without pay.

That is the only thing definitely fixed in the specifications drafted by the Board of Freeholders. What the members' duties are is not so clearly defined as what their reward shall be.

The charter merely recites that they shall "receive complaints against any department, board, division, officer or employe of the city, or against any public utility corporation."

Old hands who have served on Assembly committees or as department heads, will say that this three-line phrase enumerates just about 90 per cent of the problems and worries of city fathers. It will be a great relief and will greatly assist work in all departments for the chief to refer the complaining party or parties, because they usually come in droves, to the "Kick Commissioners."

Mayor Hurriedly Leaves Town.

In fact, handling complaints from the public has become the main test of statesmanship with modern city officials. They have no trouble with affairs of state that do not produce complaints, if by any chance such affairs develop in the short life of an administration.

Mayor Kiel, who has been in office long enough to have met several well-developed, interesting complaints, departed for Excelsior Springs for an indefinite stay a few hours after he appointed the Complaint Board members. The Mayor gave no explanation of his hurried departure further than to say he intended to take a rest where it was quiet. The "Kick Commissioners" will have to struggle along for a few days, at least, without reinforcements, as no official other than the Mayor assumes responsibility for them or their troubles.

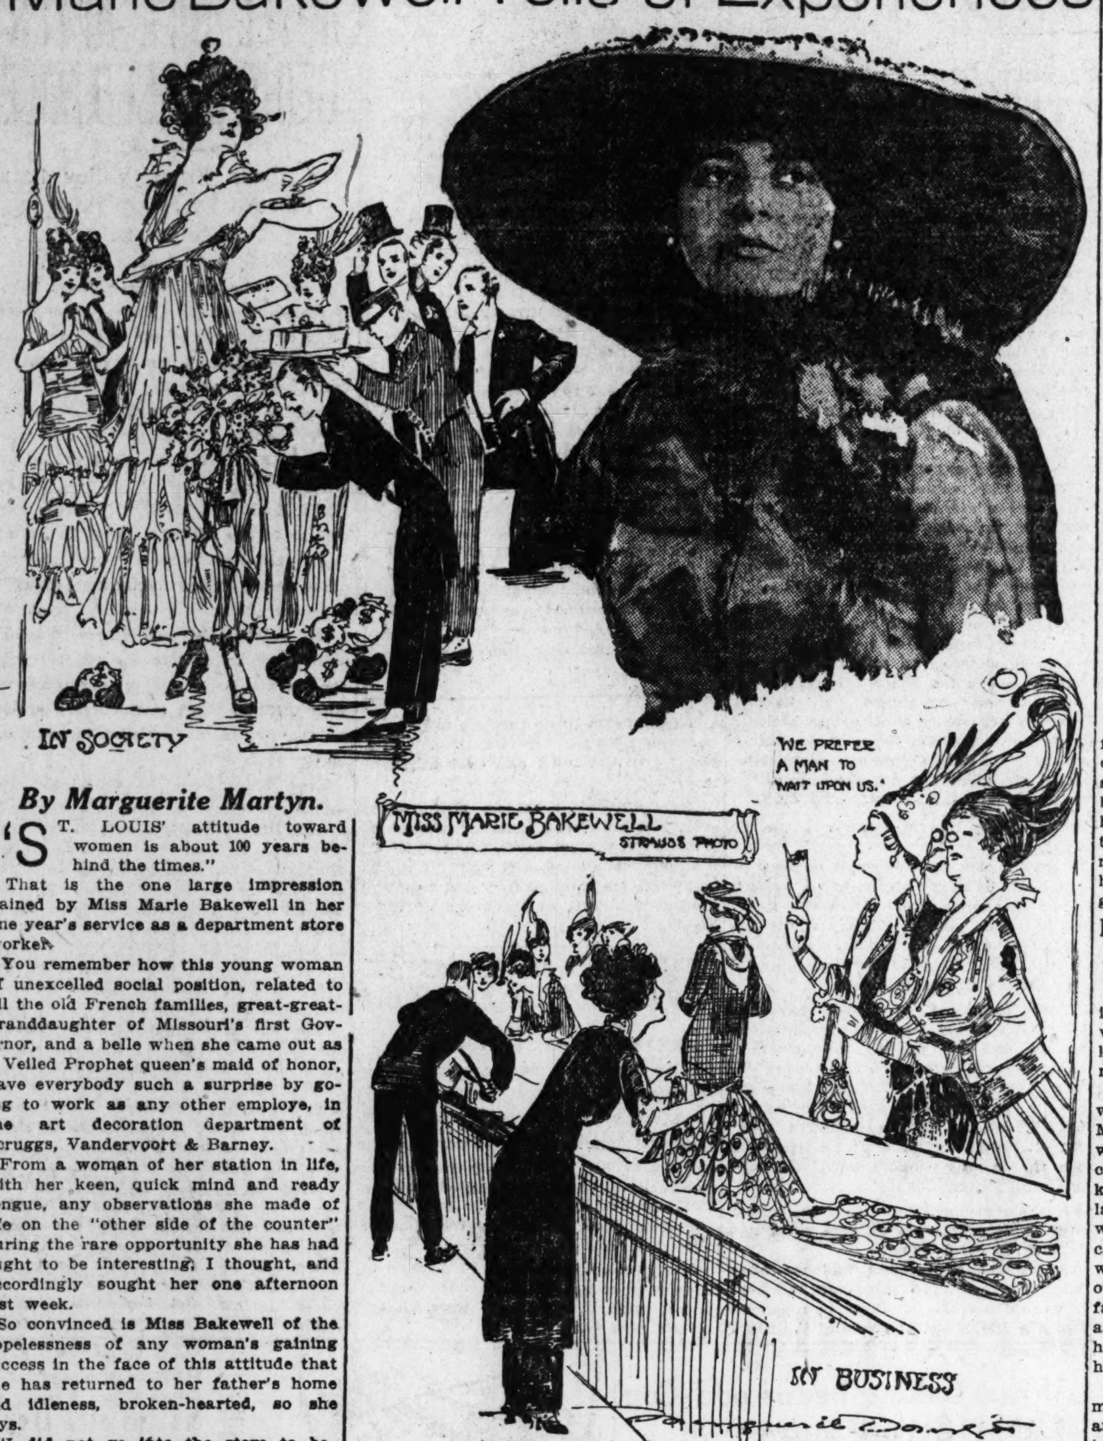
St. Louis' Attitude Toward Woman 100 Years Behind Times, Asserts Society Shop Girl

Marie Bakewell Tells of Experiences



By Marguerite Martyn.

"ST. LOUIS' attitude toward women is about 100 years behind the times."

That is the one large impression gained by Miss Marie Bakewell in her one year's service as a department store worker.

You remember how this young woman of unexcelled social position, related to all the old French families, great-great-granddaughter of Missouri's first Governor, and a belle when she came out as a Veiled Prophet queen's maid of honor, gave everybody such a surprise by going to work as any other employe, in the art decoration department of Scruggs, Vandervoort & Barney.

From a woman of her station in life, with her keen, quick mind and ready tongue, any observations she made of life on the "other side of the counter" during the rare opportunity she has had ought to be interesting, I thought, and accordingly sought her one afternoon last week.

So convinced is Miss Bakewell of the hopelessness of any woman's gaining success in the face of this attitude that she has returned to her father's home and idleness, broken-hearted, so she says.

"I did not go into the store to become a saleswoman, primarily, although that was part of my duties. I craved experience and success in the work my whole heart and brain had been absorbed in since I've been old enough to think or feel—that is, house decoration. I thought home and other interior decoration peculiarly a woman's field. I know my designs were good. My schemes were accepted and used right along, anonymously.

A "Nine-Day Wonder."

"BUT when the customer came to know a woman's ideas had figured in them, gently, politely always, but firmly, would orders be countermanded and 'we really prefer a man to do our room' or house or whatever it was, would be the final excuse."

"Do you think your having been best known as a social butterfly may have had something to do with weakening people's confidence in your really doing serious work?" I asked.

"Oh, no. The society girl turning shop girl, the papers seemed to think was a matter of great news and on that account I was a nine-day wonder. I could understand people who had known me only in society or who recognized me from the newspaper accounts refusing to believe me capable of serious motives. But they were not the ones to discriminate against me. Just the usual customer, hundreds of them who came into the store, bent upon getting the best values, the best service, the best effects in their decorations, before they had glanced above the hem of my skirt, would say, 'we prefer a man to wait upon us.' And even when I had the opportunity, as I often did, when the department would send me to the customer's home to see what was needed, even when I had time to talk, show and convince them of the sort of effects their particular house required, they would accept my advice and suggestions, yes, and hand them on, as their own ideas, probably, for execution by some man in the business.

"I do not believe, from my own experience, it is possible for a woman to compete with a man in any line of legitimate business in St. Louis."

Housewife Mold for All.

"I CAN'T explain it," she replied, when I urged her further. "I don't attempt to explain it," and she gave a gesture of despair.

"In Chicago, in New York and in San Francisco women are able to capitalize their mental, artistic, commercial ability or whatever gifts they may possess. Their work is accepted upon its actual merit. Nobody stops to ask whether a man or a woman was responsible for it. I know many women very successful in the same line of endeavor I entered, but none in St. Louis.

"It is too trite to talk of St. Louis conservatism—that precious conventionality that simply lumps all women into a class and assumes they are all cast in the same mold."

"And the same mold into which all are cast is that of housewife," I suggested. "If you only had heard all the references to the dishpan, the washtub and the garbage can I heard on election day!"

"The kitchen or the parlor—those seem to be St. Louis' one conception of 'woman's sphere,'" she responded.

"I determined not to let those old-fashioned notions bother me when I went into business. I might be regarded as a freak of nature for a while, but soon I hoped to make an impression only as an individual.

"But individualism among women has not yet reached St. Louis. I have been terribly disappointed. I assure you I should never want my sisters or any other woman I cared for to experience such disappointment as my failure in the business world has been to me."

Miss Bakewell's Tastes.

I DID not agree with Miss Bakewell that individualism is not appreciated and allowed to develop in St. Louis. And Miss Bakewell, as an individual of striking personality, could not have failed to succeed, it seemed to me. In talking of her work she is most convincing. Her own tastes in decoration lean toward the purely classic and she approves only the classic principles in color and form even when the style is modern. In designing a house or room for another, each case must be considered as individual, for it should, above all things, reflect the personality of the occupant or the purpose of the room. Further testimony or her ability was present there in her own home. An old house it is, at 3907 West Pine boulevard, but with an admirable interior since the daughter undertook to restore it. As to her own personality, she was not the least decorative thing about the place, by any means—of a pure brunette type, with large dark eyes, dusky lashes and a wealth of midnight hair and splendid coloring. Indeed, she has been known as one of the prettiest girls in society.

Taking these facts into consideration, I asked:

"Wasn't it something in the life of a saleswoman that was distasteful to you?"

"Oh, no," came the response quickly, "I have a lively imagination and was quite prepared for just about what I found in condition on the other side of the counter. I gained no new impressions there. I knew the work would be hard and the hours long. I could have endured all that. It was simply those repeated discriminations against my work on account of my sex that disheartened me and caused me finally to give up."

Descendant of Pioneers.

MISS BAKEWELL was departing for Chicago that same evening. She would not admit that she intended to try her fortune in a city where at least the prejudice that we know of against woman has been removed.

All this time, in spite of her extravagant protestations of discouragement, Miss Bakewell's manner belied her words. She looked anything but downcast and certain merry, mocking sparkle kept playing hide-and-seek under her lashes. I, too, could indulge some inward meditating. Here was the descendant of noted St. Louis pioneers, who in doing a little pioneering of her own, in one short year acknowledged failure. She was altogether too blythe and gay about it to conform with other heritary gifts plainly to be traced to her.

I wondered if it wasn't something more compelling than yearnings after artistic recognition that had caused her to "give up" and return to society. But she refused to admit she is or has any idea of being engaged.

DIVORCE EVIDENCE MANUFACTURED, IS CHARGE OF JUDGE

Rejects Testimony Against Woman Secured Over Phone in Lawyer's Office.

"Manufactured evidence," was the term which Circuit Judge Fisher, from the bench, applied to a method employed in obtaining testimony against Mrs. Estella Bender, a china painter, to whom he granted a decree of divorce Friday against Joseph Bender, a wealthy meat dealer of 2900 Harper street. Judge Fisher had previously given a divorce to Mrs. Bender, in June, 1913, but had permitted Bender to reopen the case on his plea of newly-discovered evidence.

This proved to be in the form of a telephone conversation alleged to have been held in the Pierce Building, in the office of one of Bender's attorneys, Taylor R. Young, between Mrs. Bender and Lee Hogane, an automobile salesman, named by Bender as co-respondent in a cross-bill.

It was testified that Hogane went voluntarily to Young's office and offered, in the hearing of Bender, a stenographer, and others, to telephone to Mrs. Bender and lead her to make statements corroborating the charges in her husband's cross-bill. The others listened at extension phones, it was alleged, and the reported conversation was taken down in shorthand by the stenographer. Her transcript was introduced as evidence.

Rebuke to Methods.

"I have been on the bench many years and have tried a large number of divorce cases," said Judge Fisher, "but I hope never to have to try another like the Bender case. I deplore the fact that an attorney's office should have been used to get evidence in this fashion. I regard it as manufactured evidence. Such methods of getting testimony should not be encouraged."

By way of emphasizing the rebuke, the Court increased the alimony allowance which he had made to Mrs. Bender at her first divorce from $50 to $60 a month, and gave her the custody of one of her children, Joseph Jr.

Judge Fisher did not go into the truth or falsity of the alleged telephone conversation. It was denied by Mrs. Bender, and also by Hogane, in an affidavit.

Exceptions to the Court's reprimand were taken by E. V. P. Schneiderhahn, one of Bender's attorneys. Judge Fisher replied that his remarks had no reference to Schneiderhahn.

One Son a Witness.

The Benders were married May 8, 1894, and separated Oct. 23, 1912. They have three sons, the eldest of whom was called as a witness by his father.

Mrs. Bender testified her husband was unkind and repulsed her affections, was quarrelsome and objected to her entertaining friends. She declared she went to Forest Park Highlands with a woman who lived above her in a flat at 4837 Labadie avenue, to which she had moved after she and her husband had separated, and that this woman acquaintance sought to tempt her to flirt with several different men. That the woman was a detective employed by Bender was alleged in an affidavit made by a man detective employed by the same agency.

At the first trial, Judge Fisher held that Bender had not substantiated his charges against Mrs. Bender, and that his alleging accusations of such gravity and failing to prove them was in itself adequate cause for granting a divorce to his wife. At about this same time, Hogane's wife divorced him in Judge Fisher's court.

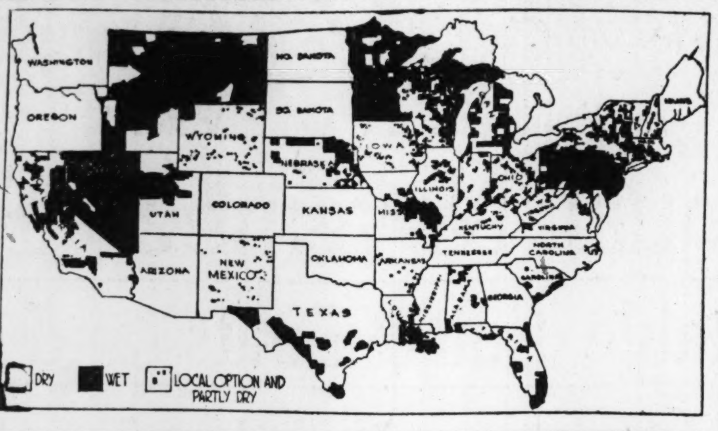
80 PER CENT OF THE TERRITORY OF THE U. S. NOW 'DRY'

More Than Half the Population of Country Under No-Saloon Rule.

14 STATES BAR LIQUOR

With Tireless Energy the Prohibition Forces Keep Up Their Battle.

Map Showing the 'Wet' and 'Dry' Area in United States



With the adoption of state-wide prohibition in four states Tuesday, the anti-saloon and prohibition forces of the country increased the total number of states in which the sale of liquor is prohibited to 14.

This year five states have been added to the list, and in all except one state the anti-saloon forces have made inroads. In some states there are only a few towns or districts in which the sale of liquor is prohibited. In others there remain only a few towns or districts in which the sale of liquor is permitted. In only one state—New Jersey—have the anti-saloon forces failed to make gains. New Jersey is all wet.

The general campaign has been to select the spots in a state where there was the greatest probability of success. A gain of only a hamlet or a township gave the white ribboners a foothold and from that foothold they have worked to gain the state. Sometimes they have been content to gain another township or a county, or a few counties a year. Other times they have fought for entire states. Sometimes they have won. Sometimes they have lost. But they have always come back at the first opportunity.

Defeat Never Admitted.

The seemingly tireless energy and the never-admit defeat spirit of the prohibition forces stands out prominently in the history of the movement.

The effect has been that today of a total of 2,973,890 square miles of territory in continental United States, 2,236,062 have no saloons and in that territory the sale of liquor is prohibited. This leaves only 737,828 square miles of territory in the United States in which liquor may legally be sold.

The population of the United States is 91,972,266. Of this population 48,118,394 persons now reside in territory in which the sale of liquor is prohibited. This is approximately 54 per cent.

In other words, in about 80 per cent of the territory of the United States the sale of liquor is prohibited by the votes of the citizens, and approximately 54 per cent of the total population of the country resides in this territory.

This shows clearly that the prohibition forces have made their greatest successes in the districts with the smallest population, and that generally speaking the large centers of population, the cities, have succesfully resisted the attempts to make them dry.

Majority Banish Saloons.

The statistics, gathered by the Anti-Saloon League, seem to indicate that if the league is successful in its desire to have the Constitution of the United States changed to permit its amendment by direct vote of the people. instead of by the votes of states, nation-wide prohibition is not far distant. A majority of the voters of the country have already banished the saloon from their immediate neighborhoods. Whether these same voters would banish it from the nation can only be conjectured.

In 1868 there were 3,500,000 persons residing in territory in which the sale of liquor was prohibited. In 1900 the number had increased to 18,000,000. In 1908 the number had doubled, reaching 36,000,000, and today it is more than 48,000,000.

The South has for many years been in the lead in the fight for prohibition. In 1907 Georgia passed a prohibition law, though not State-wide. Within a year Oklahoma was admitted to the Union with a constitutional prohibition against liquor. Alabama and Mississippi soon followed. In 1908 prohibition was voted into the Constitution of North Carolina. Tennessee followed in 1909. Alabama is the only Southern States which has dropped out of the prohibition column, doing so in 1911, by repealing the prohibition law and adopted a local option measure. In 1912 West Virginia voted out saloons.

The prohibitory law had a close call in 1911 in Maine, where it had been in effect for 55 years. It was resubmitted and was carried by a bare majority of 758.

Last September Virginia adopted prohibition, and at Tuesday's election Arizona, Washington, Oregon and Colorado were added to the list

States Prohibiting Liquor.

The prohibition forces have met with reverses. They failed to win in Florida, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Colorado and Oregon within the last four years, though two of these states accepted prohibition this year. In two states which voted on the question this year, the proposition failed to carry. They were Ohio and California. The Ohio election was close, but prohibition was overwhelmingly defeated in California, probably due to the extensive wine industry in the State. Under the form in which the proposition was submitted in California it cannot again be put to a vote within eight years.

The following are the states in which the sale of liquor is prohibited: Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Georgia, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Mississippi, Tennessee, West Virginia, Virginia, Arizona, Washington, Oregon and Colorado.

In these states from 50 to 85 per cent of the population live in no-license territory: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas and Vermont.

Only a few years ago the Sunday closing law was put in effect but was not observed in any of the large cities of the country. Today there are few of the larger cities in which liquor may be obtained in open saloons on Sunday. Among the cities in which Sunday closing is enforced with only occasional violations are: St. Louis, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Buffalo, Washington, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Seattle, Indianapolis, Providence, Louisville, St. Paul, Denver, Portland, Columbus, Omaha and Dayton.

Dry Fight in Missouri.

In Missouri the anti-saloon forces have made a constant fight for many years. They have failed to carry the State for prohibition, but they have succeeded in limiting the liquor traffic so that in only 23 of the 114 counties of the State are saloons generally permitted. In a number of other counties saloons are permitted only in towns having a population of 2500 or more.

At the last Legislature a bill was passed to permit counties to vote as a whole on local option, and removing the privilege accorded under the law to cities of 2500 or more inhabitants to vote separately. The liquor interests took the law to a vote of the people under the referendum, and it was defeated with all constitutional amendments and other propositions submitted under the referendum.

County Unit Proposition.

The county unit proposition carried by a large majority outside of St. Louis, but was defeated in St. Louis by a majority which overcame the vote for it out in the State. The Anti-Saloon League officers say they will present it to the next Legislature, and that in addition they will present a measure to permit precincts in the city to vote whether saloons shall be permitted in the precinct voting.

This plan is in line with the history of the prohibition fight for half a century. The workers have never admitted defeat, and have not failed to come back with measures more stringent than those defeated. They have had a record of successes, and they are still fighting.

Man Tells Cincinnati Police He Robbed Restaurant Safe in St. Louis.

Peter A. Edwards, 28 years old, surrendered to the Cincinnati police yesterday and told them he had stolen $150 from the safe of the Press Lunchroom, 529 Pine street, Aug. 24.

He gave himself up, he said, because he had just been told by a man from St. Louis that Miss Mary Camenzind of 1910 California avenue, the cashier, was held responsible for the theft, and was paying the amount back in small weekly installments, while acting as the sole support of her widowed mother. He said he wanted to return and face the charge himself.

William Jaeger, proprietor of the restaurant, said Edwards' statement about the cashier being required to make good the sum was false. He did not know who robbed him, and he was not going to "throw good money after bad" to bring Edwards to St. Louis to prosecute him.

Miss Camenzind said that instead of being the "sole support of a widowed mother" she was one of a family of five children.

Edwards had been a "busboy" in Jaeger's employ for several months before the robbery. He disappeared a day before the robbery occurred, but he said he had learned the combination of the safe and had robbed it after he had been drinking.

WITHDRAWS FARE SUIT AS JUDGE RULES FOR ROAD

Barker's Assistant Interrupts Court, About to Sustain Demurrer at Poplar Bluff.

POPLAR BLUFF, Mo., Nov. 7.—Judge J. P. Foard of the Circuit Court of Butler County today gave an opinion indicating that he intended to sustain the demurrer filed by the defendant in the action brought by State's Attorney-General John T. Barker on behalf of the State of Missouri against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company to recover claims alleged to be due passengers and shippers and the State of Missouri itself, under the minimum passenger and freight rate laws enacted by the Legislature.

The opinion of the judge was not put in writing, but was delivered orally from the bench, and before it could be completed and entered of record, W. M. Fitch, assistant attorney-general of the State, withdrew the case. By this legal move the case stands as though it had never been brought, and the Attorney-General may, if he sees fit, bring suit in some other court in the State.

In his action, the Attorney-General made a blanket claim of $2,000,000 against the railroad company and wanted a master appointed to hear the various claims.

Judge Foard stated that the Attorney-General had no authority to recover on shippers' and passengers' claims and could not recover on the part of the State itself on the petition he had filed, as it did not set out the amounts alleged to have been paid by the State to the railroad company in excess of the rates fixed by the law.

Moszkowski —master musician will teach YOU personally

Through the wonderful Metrostyle Line personally dictated by Maurice Moszkowski on his own compositions, it is possible for you to learn as though under his personal guidance—to interpret his music just as he, the composer, intended it to be interpreted.

It has never been found possible to accurately indicate on sheet music the delicate changes of tempo by which the great musicians so beautifully and clearly express their emotions. It has remained for the Metrostyle—to the authoritative red line on Pianola music rolls—to successfully record for your guidance the "tempo rubato"—the delicate changes of time—which characterize the playing of all the living master musicians.

At the right, for example, is Moszkowski's "Barcarolle" bearing his personally autographed Metrostyle interpretation line. By following this line with the Metrostyle pointer attached to the tempo lever of the Pianola you yourself may personally reproduce the exact tempo phrasing of this great composer.

You may study his moods and clearly understand how he achieves his musical effects. The Metrostyle is there to guide you. You may disregard it if you wish and play to suit your own fancy. As a guide to authoritative interpretation the Metrostyle marks a tremendous advance in music—its importance will grow upon you the more familiar you become with its potent possibilities.

Maurice Moszkowski

The Metrostyle is exclusive to the Pianola

Metrostyle Pianola rolls are sold only to bona fide owners of the Pianola. They are of no use to owners of ordinary "player-pianos." The Metrostyle is exclusively a feature of the Pianola—and together with many other vital improvements is covered by more than 300 United States and foreign patents of the Aeolian Company, makers of the famous Pianola.

The Pianola is the player action built by the Aeolian Company—not by any means an ordinary player-piano. Great musicians the world over unanimously say that the Pianola is the only player action worthy of serious musical consideration. It is offered in but six models; Steinway, Stroud, Stuyvesant, Steck, Wheelock and Weber, and exhibited in this city only by the makers.

Why consider imitations when you may have the Pianola itself for as little as $550.

Terms $3 weekly

The Pianola is built in both Grand and Upright styles. It is the only player to be successfully incorporated within the Grand Piano.

WIFE, ONCE "BELLE OF GRANDSTAND," SUES ORTHWEIN

Woman Was Divorced by Catcher Jack O'Connor Who Named Her Present Husband.

CHARGES INTOXICATION

Defendent Was Once Known as a Lavish Spender—2 Homes Were Broken Up.

FORMER MRS. O'CONNOR WHO ASKS DIVORCE

MRS. CORA I. ORTHWEIN.

Mrs. Cora I. Orthwein, formerly known as "the belle of the grandstand" when she was the wife of Jack O'Connor, then catcher for the St. Louis Browns, yesterday confessed defeat in the second game of her matrimonial series by filing suit to divorce Ralph H. Orthwein, president of the Continental Oil Co., once known as one of the most lavish spenders among the wealthy young men of St. Louis.

Mrs. Orthwein charges that her husband associated with other women, that he was addicted to intoxication, that he possessed a violent temper and frequently became furious with hatred towards her, that he often swore at her and called her names and that he remained away from home for weeks at a time, refusing to tell her where he had been.

They separated, the petition states, more than two and a half years ago, on May 25, 1912. Mrs. Orthwein since has lived mostly in New York. Her husband resides at the Rappahannock apartments, Clara avenue and Delmar boulevard.

They were married Aug. 21, 1907.

The divorce suit discloses the collapse of a marriage which was based upon the wreck of two homes. O'Connor obtained a divorce in 1906, naming Orthwein as corespondent. A year later the first Mrs. Orthwein, who was Miss Neva Landrum, a cousin of the late Col. Tom Landrum, president of the Planters Hotel Co,. obtained a divorce at Mount Vernon, Mo., her only charges being desertion and nonsupport. A little more than a month later Orthwein and Mrs. O'Connor were quietly married in New York.

Said to Have Inherited $500,000.

Orthwein is said to have inherited $500,000 from the fortune, estimated at several millions, which was left by his father, the late Charles Orthwein, traction magnate. For some years the son poured out his money with both hands, in entertaining not only friends, but chance acquaintances, in maintaining racing stables and a kennel of racing dogs in California.

Naturally, when the new American League decided to invade St. Louis in 1901, Orthwein, as one of the city's leading devotees of sports, was turned to for help in financing the team. He contributed generously and was elected president of the St. Louis Browns.

In this capacity he made the acquaintance of Jack O'Connor, member of the famous "brother-in-law battery," in which his partner was Jack Powell, the pitcher. O'Connor had recently married Miss Cora Hunt, one of the three "Hunt sisters," noted for their beauty and gaiety. It was said by fans, who saw Mrs. O'Connor in a box in the grandstand at every game the Browns played at home, that her extreme enthusiasm whenever her husband made a brilliant catch or hit was as thrilling a spectacle as the game itself. O'Connor himself introduced his wife to the president of the ball club.

The frequency with which the dashing young wife of the ballplayer and Orthwein began to be seen together at places of amusement in the West End caused considerable comment. One of the last to whose ears it reached was O'Connor himself, who had regarded Orthwein as his bosom friend. O'Connor has often stated that one night, on finding them together at one of the dance halls near the World's Fair, he intended to kill them both, but was restrained by friends.

Orthwein Lost in Speculation.

Meantime Orthwein had been plunging in the Fourth street commission houses so recklessly that he won the nickname of "the Keene of St. Louis." At first he was successful, but the tide turned and he was obliged to draw disastrously upon his fortune to meet his losses. In this crisis, his brothers and others interested compelled him to sign over to them the remainder of his money. With it a trust was created, and it was estimated that in 15 years the principal would earn enough to put him back on his feet again financially.

Soon after O'Connor obtained a divorce, Mrs. Neva Orthwein left her husband and went to live at the Planters Hotel. Her divorce suit followed within the year. After Orthwein's marriage to Mrs. O'Connor they lived at 6190 Washington boulevard.

The first public notice of their separation was disclosed in a suit for $200 filed Dec. 8, 1913, by Willard H. Guest, a lawyer, who alleged that Mrs. Orthwein owed him that sum for his services in drawing up a divorce petition. This suit, which was never filed, alleged general indignities and intoxication.

NEGRO, ANNOYED BY CROWD, FRACTURES EMPLOYER'S SKULL

Charles Cullen, East St. Louis Provision Dealer, Struck by 8-Pound Hammer.

Charles Cullen, 45 years old, president of the North Side Provision Co., at the National Stockyards, East St. Louis, is in danger of losing his life as a result of a crowd of men playing practical jokes yesterday afternoon upon William Ramsey, a negro employed by Cullen.

Cullen was operated upon at St. Mary's Hospital there last night for a fractured skull, suffered when he was struck by Ramsey with an eight-pound steel hammer ordinarily used for slaughtering cattle.

Ramsey told the police he was being teased by several other employes, who had been in the habit of tormenting him by slapping him and pushing him around. He said some of them shoved him so violently that he fell, and as he regained his feet he seized the hammer and swung at the crowd.

He turned and ran, he said, without seeing who received the blow. He was caught at the Relay Depot after being chased a mile.

He said Cullen was his best friend, having given him a job two years ago when he was out of work, and that he would not have harmed him intentionally.

Ramsey was held without bond to await the outcome of Cullen's injury.

I thought, I will have to give up; but at last my mother read about Peruna, so I thought of trying that great medicine, Peruna. By James E. Craig.

WASHINGTON University's football eleven, by a score of 6 to 0, defeated the St. Louis University team at Francis Field yesterday afternoon in the first contest of the kind the two schools have staged since athletic relations were severed in 1907. While it would not be just to say Washington's victory was fluky, the Pikers had the fight of their lives and were never certain they had things sewed up until the final whistle blew.

The largest St. Louis crowd of the present football year witnessed the game. A conservative estimate of the attendance would put it slightly under 10,000. It was a bigger crowd than that which witnessed the Washington-Rolla affair, and was decidedly noisier. Students of both schools turned out in force and, from different sections, engaged in a rooting duel. St. Louis seemed to have an edge in the cheering. It was one of the best exhibitions of college spirit the Blue and White has given in several years.

The only touchdown in the game came in the first quarter. It resulted from a long lateral pass, Potthoff to Puffy Martin. Somebody in the Billikins' aggregation must have taken a fatal nap or there would have been no score on this particular play. Martin simply strolled out unwatched along the side lines and was in the right position to take care of Potthoff's long heave. However, Washington was going at its tiptop pace just then and probably would have scored anyway.

Teams Evenly Matched.

In general, the two teams were pretty evenly matched. On paper St. Louis had an advantage in weight, but this was more a theoretical than actual advantage. The St. Louis keystone was 41 pounds to the man heavier than the guards and center of Washington, but the myrtle and maroon had a weight advantage of 15 pounds to the man on its left wing, three pounds to the man on its right wing and 10 pounds to the man in the back field.

From the outset it looked as if the directors of the opposing elevens had analyzed these advantages and determined to make the most of them The Billikins played their weight preponderance at center for all it was worth, sticking to straight, smashing football as long as it promised anything. Washington early discovered a weakness on the right side of the St. Louis line and directed most of its early plays that way, varying smashes off tackle with wide end runs.

This policy, coupled with frequent use of passes and calls upon the superior weight, speed and experience of the back field, made things look bad for the Billikins in the first quarter. Washington's ends were heavier and, notwithstanding that Gross and Thole fought like tigers, often succeeded either in boxing the opposing wing men or formed a stonewall interference before the Billikin defense could get under way.

While it is never easy to judge motives from the side lines, it is credible that Washington generalship was at fault for not relying more upon this advantage later in the game. In the slashing, lunging Potthoff and in the fleet and elusive Milford, the myrtle and maroon had two extremely effective men. As the contest wore on more and more reliance was placed in these two for wide end runs, when it really appeared that continued sledge-hammer attacks at the blue and white right would have been more productive of results.

Billikens Are Aroused.

It was not until after they had been scored on, that Coach Keogan's men really got into the fight. In the second quarter the blue and white developed pronounced superiority in smashing tactics, which was rather surprising, considering that the heaviest of their backs, Welch, weighed only 168 pounds and that the two halfbacks did not weigh 286 pounds between them.

They early attempted a variation of the Minnesota shift, but it did not gain them much. For one reason, doubtless, they did not get the play off smoothly enough. There was too much pause when the men came up on the line and the momentum for which the play is intended was lost It almost appeared that the shift was designed rather to confuse the opposition than to add force to the charge. If that was its purpose it failed, for the myrtle and maroon had no trouble with it. Once Thole called a forward pass from the shift formation, a play that proved quite as futile as it sounds.

Minnesota Shift a Failure for St. Louis; Pikers Passing Perfect

THE Billikens did far better when they discarded the shift and stuck to more conventional formations. In every quarter except the first they gained more ground by rushing than their opponents did, although in the entire game they made first down only nine times as against Washington's 13. They failed lamentably with the forward pass, failing to gain a yard with it in five trials.

The Pikers, on the other hand, made brilliant use of the pass. They failed with it only six times out of 16 attempts. It netted them a total of 152 yards and was directly responsible for their touchdown, not only on the scoring play itself, but on the plays which put them within striking distance. The passes, as a rule, were longer and cleaner than in their game with Drake, although in the rest of their play, yesterday, they did not shine as brightly as they did in the Drake contest.

The expected Billikens' superiority in kicking did not materiaze. At the most, Thomas' punts never averaged more than two or three yards more than Potthoff's. As a rule they were lower and faster and did not give the ends sufficient time to get down under them, while Potthoff's were high and slow. As a result, Washington gained ground on each exchange, being able to rush the ball back enough to more than compensate for the extra yard or so on the kick. The Pikers returned punts for a total of 113 yards, whereas the Billikens only netted 28 yards from this source in the entire game.

Washington Wins With Rush.

The first quarter was overwhelmingly Washington's. In this period, as against 30 yards by St. Louis, tne

Coach Keogan in Tears After Game; Rooters Jubilant

While thousands of St. Louis University football followers were filing out of Francis Field, immediately after the game yesterday afternoon jubilant at the wonderful and most surprising showing made by the Billikens against the Pikers, the interior of the defeated team's dressing room in the university gymnasium presented quite a different aspect.

Standing in one corner, sobbing like a baby, was Coach George Keogan, the plucky little mentor, who has turned the Grand avenue team from a misfit eleven into a worthy opponent of Washington University's "best team in eight years." Keogan broke down when he reached the "gym" and took his defeat to heart.

While in tears, however, he praised his men and said that they deserved unlimited credit. He refused to accept any laurels himself, claiming it was the team that had done the playing and not he.

Huddled in the various corners of the room were some 15 Billikens, more morose than their coach It is the firm belief of each of the Grand avenue gridders that their team is undoubtedly better than the Piker eleven. They think they outplayed their opponents.

Gate Receipts for Game Will Be Over $10,000

Although no official attendance of the Washington-St. Louis U. game has been given out, athletic authorities of the schools stated last night that about 9000 persons saw the game. The receipts will be split Monday, after reports are turned in from the various downtown houses that had the tickets on sale.

It was announced that 3900 general admission tickets were sold at the gate. The receipts of this sale will, however, be much larger, as the additional fee of grand stand boxes, field boxes and machines has not as yet been included. The total receipts will probably be in the neighborhood of $10,000.

Leverenz Stars for Arkansas.

SHREVEPORT, La., Nov. 7.—Louisiana State University was defeated by the University of Arkansas today, 20 to 12. Louisiana lost two chances to score by fumbles on Arkansas' 2-yard line. Halfback Leverenz played a star game for Arkansas, scoring two touchdowns, one on a 45-yard run around Louisiana's left end. Bernstein played a star game at full back for Louisiana.

Long Run Wins for Marquette.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 7.—Marquette University today defeated Creighton of Omaha by a 6 to 0 score here yesterday. The one touchdown came in the last quarter, when Buetler, Marquette left halfback, brushed tackle and tore off a 35-yard run. Goal was not kicked. During the last two minutes of play, Creighton carried the ball 50 yards down the field with two forward passes, but failed on a third pass to the goal as time was called.

ARMY DEFEATS NOTRE DAME BY SCORE OF 20 TO 7

Brilliant Offensive Scores for Cadets in Third—Forward Passing Unsuccessful.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 7.—The Army won from Notre Dame today, 20 to 7. The West Pointers handled the ball loosely throughout the contest.

The Army's initial score came in the first few minutes of play, after Cofall muffed a punt and Goodman fell on the ball on Notre Dame's 15-yard line. The cadets took the ball over in four plays, Hodgson making the touchdown and Benedict kicking goal. The cadets blocked a Notre Dame punt in the same quarter, Butler breaking through on Cofall's kick and Benedict falling on the ball over the line for a tally. The latter also kicked goal.

Notre Dame flashed a fine offensive drive in the third quarter and rushed the ball 40 yards for a score. Pliska and Cofall starring in the advance. Cofall went over for the touchdown and kicked the goal. The Army scored again in the last quarter.

There was much forward passing, but neither team made a success of it. Mills' end play and Pliska's fine work in the back field featured for Notre Dame, while Hodgson, Benedict, Merrillat, and Butler were the Army's stars.

OPEN PLAY GAINS A VICTORY FOR HOOSIERS

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 7.—A series of brilliant forward passes in the third and fourth quarters netted Ohio State two touchdowns and a victory over Indiana, 13 to 3. Indiana's points were scored when Archie Erehart drop-kicked a goal in the second period. Neither team tried the open game in the first half and at line-smashing and punting Indiana proved superior.

Goullet and Hill Win Bike Race.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 7.—Alfred Goullet of Australia and Fred Hill of Watertown tonight won the six-day bicycle race which has been in progress 10 hours each day during the last week. Reggie McNamara of Australia and James F. Moran of Chelsea formed the combination which won second money. A team composed of Iver Lawson of Salt Lake City and Peter Drobach of Boston was third.

Yale Wins Over Brown, 14 to 6, in Below-Form Play

Second-String Backs Make Costly Fumbles and Whole Team Is Hard Pressed.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 7.—Yale played below form today and was forced to extend itself to the limit to defeat Brown, 14 to 6. With all the regular Yale back field except Ainsworth watching the Harvard-Princeton game at Cambridge, the second-string backs played loosely and made costly fumbles when within the scoring zone. FUMBLED PUNT SPELLS DEFEAT FOR PITTSBURG

PITTSBURG, Nov. 7.—In a game featured by forward passes and long kicks, Washington and Jefferson College, which numbers Yale among its victims of the season, today defeated the University of Pittsburg's eleven on Forbes Field, 13 to 10.

Washington and Jefferson could not, gain through Pittsburg's line and resorted to long forward passes, which were successful. Penalties, however, cut down such gains. Pittsburg held W. and J. for downs three times within the 5-yard line. A pretty goal from field by Hastings gave Pittsburg the first score in the second period after the elevens had played to a standstill in the first quarter. Bovill, for W. and J., then scored a touchdown on a long forward pass. A series of line plunges brought Collins across for the local touchdown. At the opening of the third period W. and J. recovered a fumbled punt and scored the winning points with a forward pass.

C. B. C. SMOTHERS MISSISSIPPI TEAM BY SCORE OF 62-0

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 7.—The Christian Brothers' College football eleven of St. Louis defeated the Mississippi College team here this afternoon. The score was 62 to 0. The affair was too much of a walkaway to excite comment.

It became evident after the first few minutes of play that the Mississippians were outclassed and the result thereafter hinged only on how large a score the Missourians could accumulate. Four touchdowns by Capt. Tom Shea, two by Sacksteder and one each by Rogers, W. Essman and Shank represents an almost unceasing march across the Missisippi goal line. Coach Bible's warriors threatened only once during the entire four periods.

The game as a whole offered little savoring of classic football. Frequent fumbles at critical moments and inconsistent playing by reputed stars offered little to the spectators. Both the old-style football and the open game were tried out. Neither team had much success with the forward pass. Mississippi made only one successful pass. The St. Louis aggregation affected five.

C. B. C. Good at End Runs.

Line plunging was called, but neither seemed able to penetrate very far by this method. C. B. C. gained the best around ends, numerous sweeping attacks netting them 25 and 30 yards at frequent intervals.

Shank scored the first touchdown after eight minutes of play. It was the result of a fumble by Mississippi and line smashes by Shea, Rogers and Shank. Shea made a good 45-yard run through a broken field for the second. Others then came with frequency and the Mississippi defense rapidly crumbled.

Deveraux kicked eight goals after touchdown for the visitors. Sacksteder, Gallagher, Deveraux, Shea and W. Essmann starred for the winning eleven. Anderson and Mangum showed best for the Clinton team. Rogers punted well for C. B. C., far outclassing his rival booter, Pearson. In the third quarter Deveraux missed an attempt at goal from the 45-yard line by inches.

Heat Worries Collegians.

The heat was telling on the Missouri players. In the second quarter several were forced to retire until later periods.

Champion Braves May Train at Hot Springs; Federal Agents Barred

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Nov. 7.—President Gaffney of the Boston National League Baseball Club is conducting negotiations with a local hotel and park management for training quarters for the 1915 spring season. The Boston Americans and Pittsburgh Nationals already have permanent quarters here.

Last year, in a test suit in Chancery Court here, Federal League scouts were permanently enjoined from tampering with or communicating with players under contract to other teams, and this court precedent, it is believed, will be made the basis of like protection by other managers training here. Hot Springs maintains three training parks.

HARVARD WRECKING CREW DEMOLISHES PRINCETON MACHINE

By Herbert Reed,
The Post-Dispatch's Eastern Football Authority.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.

HARVARD'S wrecking crew slapped into the carefully reared edifice of revived Princeton football in the Stadium today with such deadly effect that it came down clattering, from shingle to adjacent shanty, leaving the Tigers hunting for the cellar to live out the Crimson cyclone.

This they did with some show of credit almost solely through the heroic efforts of Captain Harold Ballin, one of the greatest leaders who has ever stood in the last ditch with old Nassau. The blond Tiger leader played about all the Princeton football there was, especially on defense, and it was by no manner of means his fault that the final score was 20 to 0 against the Jerseymen.

Fully 35,000 people, a big proportion from the shores of Carneige Lake, saw the rout of the Orange and Black—saw the Whirlwind onslaught of the Crimson, a scoring machine that chalked up results in three periods out of four; saw the Tigers outplayed at almost every point almost from the start in a game that would have been brilliant had it not been so terribly one-sided.

Tigers Disappoint Followers.

It is subtracting nothing from the glory of Harvard's decisive victory to say that the Nassau eleven was very far from being what it had been planned to be. Mistakes of the head were supplemented by those of the hands and feet with such great regularity that it only remained for the hard-running, up-standing Harvard backs and the hard-changing Cambridge line to drive home a rushing attack that gained 26 first downs to Princeton's two and that was so evidently in the mastery almost from the start that it was only a question of how many points the Crimson would be able to score, not against Princeton, but against Capt. Ballin, who was all things to all on the Princeton team, and the lone character in the Tiger line that stood out like a rock against which the attack broke and recoiled again and again.

With the exception of Hingley at one end, Ballin was in a class by himself in comparison with the rest of the Tiger eleven. He had brains, and he used them. He had strength, and he used it. He had cunning, and he used it. Highley, until recently a substitute end, was an able assistant at times, but the stars of the Tiger eleven were snuffed out, partly because of the smashing play of the Crimson and partly because of their own slipshod work.

Ballin a Team in Himself.

Of all the Tiger eleven Ballin alone showed the real football sense. He played both tackles, he played what practically amounted to a roving center, and he was to all intents and purposes a defensive halfback. Had there been two of him the score might have been cut in two.

And where was Princeton, when the Crimson backs unlimbered their slashing attack? Up with the man who had already gained a reasonable distance and unable to shake men like Hardwick, Francke and Bradlee off their feet even when the lagging Princeton football intelligence had diagnosed the play.

Alert Crimson Ends Smother Tigers' Attempt at Open Game

PRINCETON fumbled, Princeton guessed wrong, Princeton tackled poorly and with brilliant exceptions now and then, Princeton had no solution for the simplest of the Harvard formations. Princeton showed, in the aggregate, neither brains nor power. Harvard showed both. Summed up, the situation was this: Harvard was 50 per cent stronger than a week ago and Princeton 50 per cent weaker than two weeks ago. The final score hardly justly represents such a difference.

Harvard showed all kinds of scoring power, and a brilliant defense against the Tigers' open game the few times the team from Nassau was justified in turning it on. Where was Princeton's vaunted open play? Well, to borrow a legal term that is extremely applicable, the Tigers were "stopped from using it."

In a sense the visitors did better kicking than the Crimson, but in another and the most important sense that of doing the better kicking and the better covering of kicks at the important moment, the advantage lay with Harvard. What few mistakes were made by Harvard came at stages when they counted for the least. Princeton's mistakes were made in situations that marked them as all the more inexcusable.

It required five minutes only to prove that Harvard was to have the whip-hand and if the Tigers were to come through at all they would have to

Princeton Has a Law That Harvard Refused to Respect Yesterday

BOXING GAME IS KILLED ON COAST BY ROUGH TACTICS

Absence of Clean Break Rule Is Real Cause for Anti-Fight Law in California.

KELLY TO MEET SHERMAN

Memphis Lightweight Will Box Compton Hill Boy at Future City A. C.

By Harry S. Sharpe.

Referee for Future City A. C. and the Post-Dispatch Boxing Authority.

The passage of the anti-prize fight measure in California marks the ending of a long fight waged against promoters and boxers who abused the privileges accorded them and brought unseemly notoriety upon the State. Rough-house fighters of the Nelson and Wolgast type flourished there, engaging in contests that had little semblance of boxing and were removed from rough-and-tumble fighting only by a prohibition not to bite, kick or strike when a man was down.

In a memorable contest which took place on May 23, 1912, between Jack Dillon and Frank Klaus at Daly City, Cal., both fighters went to such extremes in their violation of the rules that, after a few rounds of the roughest sort of mauling, the referee stepped aside and told them to fight it out as they pleased. He had grown weary of trying to separate them and couldn't stop their foul work. Instead of disqualifying one or both of them and putting an end to it, the fight was allowed to go on and at the end of 20 rounds Klaus was declared the winner.

Fight Provoked Storm.

As a result of that fight, petitions were circulated throughout the State and thousands of signers secured as a protest against the continuance of such exhibitions. This petition was presented to the Governor and a strong effort was made to stop prize-fighting in California. This effort was defeated at that time, but the war waged upon the game was continued, with the result that it is now done for.

Repeated warnings to promoters and boxers that their indifferent toleration of flagrant violations of the Queensbery rules was an encouragement to prize-fighting in all its disgusting brutality and a menace to the sport of boxing were ignored. It has even become customary now for boxers who have been bred in that school, when going to other parts of the country where they are obliged to observe the rules, to plead in extenuation of their disqualification or defeat that "they don't box that way out on the coast."

Clean Sport Is Welcomed.

Wherever boxing has been legalized in recent years restrictions have been enforced eliminating conditions such as have brought about the death of professional boxing in California and which will bring it into disrepute wherever tolerated. Boxing, properly conducted, is a grand sport that may well be encouraged, but brutalized and permitted to degenerate to the rough-and-tumble method temporized merely by the wearing of gloves, it deserves to be eliminated and the California fight promoters are now paying the price of their short-sightedness.

Sherman Meets Leo Kelly.

Owing to the fact that Pal Brown of Wisconsin, who was announced as Leo Kelly's opponent for next Tuesday night at the Future City Athletic Club, has declined to take on the match at the weight stipulated, his place will be taken by Joe Sherman of Memphis, Tenn. He will meet Kelly at catch-weights.

Sherman has been seen in St. Louis several times and has registered a hit with the local fans on each occasion. He is a hard-hitting, snappy boxer who carries battle to his opponent and seldom backs away. He boxed "New York" Danny Goodman here and Jack Shelton twice. Goodman did little but cover up and was an easy victim. It was different with Shelton. The first time Sherman, boxing before the St. Louis Athletic Club, lost to Shelton, but the second time, before the Future Athletic Club, Sherman was the winner by a wide margin, though the St. Louis boy put up a game battle to the end.

On last Monday night Sherman gave Stanley Yoakum a good trouncing in 15 rounds at Denver, Colo. It will be recalled that Kelly boxed a draw with Yoakum in a bout that was marked by extreme rough work, Yoakum wrestling and being allowed to do almost as he pleased.

Bud Clancy and "Scotty" McMurdo will meet in the semi-final at 145 pounds. On Oct. 27 McMurdo stopped Harry Oakel in the third round, while Clancy made a punching bag of Johnny Kern.

In the preliminaries, Red O'Malley is matched with Jimmie Hughes at 123 pounds and "St. Louis" Tommy Murphy with Harry Miller at 118 pounds.

All the bouts will be for eight rounds each except the last, which is scheduled for four.

SOLDAN SWAMPS SMITH, 77—0, IN JOKE GAME

The Soldan High School football eleven struck its stride once again yesterday, and defeated the Smith Academy team by the overwhelming score of 77 to 0, on the Christian Brothers' College campus. This is by far the largest total run up by a "prep" team this year.

Soon after the high school machine started scoring, Coach Kelly sent in his reserves and before the contest was over, every member on the squad had been in the fray. Soldan meets Central for the high school title next Saturday.

EAST ST. LOUIS HIGH IS EASY FOR McKINLEY, 38—0

Despite the fact that three of the regulars were out of the game owing to injuries, the McKinley High School football eleven won over the East St. Louis High team, 38 to 0, on the Manual Training School campus yesterday morning.

The South Side lads put up a splendid exhibition and outclassed the Illinoisans at every department of the game. Snyder, Burke and Krenzer did not get into the lineup.

Rosson Wins for Knox.

GALESBURG, Ill., Nov. 7.—Knox College today defeated Lombard, 10 to 3. Knox scored a touchdown in the third period on a line plunge by Rosson, who later kicked goal. Stowe for Knox and Seeley for Lombard made goals from drop kicks.

Detailed Description of How the Piker Beat the Billiken

By Ralph Bryan.

THE Pikers were the first to put in their appearance, getting on the field at 2:48, led by their ever-present mascot, Little Gene Lund, and Capt. Potthoff. Five minutes later the blue and white squad was heralded by a lusty chorus of cheers from the St. L. U. section. Both elevens ran through a short but spirited signal workout and Referee Connett summoned the captains to midfield.

Capt. Nyquist of St. Louis won the toss and chose to defend the west goal with the sun and the little breeze at his back.

First Quarter.

Promptly at 3:05, Wetzel kicked off for Washington. Thole received the ball and made a nice return of 15 yards. The blue and white failed on their first opportunity to show their offensive powers, for after Thomas and Thole were unable to gain through the maroon line, Thomas dropped back for a punt. The kick was good for 40 yards and Milford fumbled it, but recovered in time to make a return of 15 yards.

Pothoff, Milford and Hetlage made it first down by means of smashing the heavy Billiken defense, and Linn put the ball on St. Louis' 17-yard line by a shifty run of 25 yards around left end. Two off-tackle plays by Capt. Boise Pothoff netted the Pikers 10 more.

The maroon rooters section went mad when, on the next play, Milford shot a perfect pass across the Billiken goal to Busick, but their joy was short-lived, for Connett claimed the pass illegal as Linn was not the required distance behind the line of scrimmage when he made the throw.

St. Louis was again unable to make any headway against the Pikers, and Thomas punted 30 yards to Potthoff. The W. U. captain returned the kick on the second play thereafter, but the maroon ends nailed Thole before he had a chance to return the ball. For the third time the Billikens were unable to gain and the ball went to Edmunds' team in midfield. Here the Pikers executed their first successful pass when a throw of 15 yards, Milford to Busick, netted 30 yards. But Gross intercepted a like pass on the following play and Thomas again booted to safety.

But Washington again started on their march to the Blue and White goal and finally managed to put the ball on St. Louis' 10-yard mark by means of Milford's and Potthoff's line skirting and another pretty pass to Bill Berry. And here it was the old shoestring trick of the days of Fritz Lehman that gave the Pikers their score.

Martin had secluded himself on the north sideline and by a difficult catch managed to grasp Potthoff's long lateral throw over the goal line, scoring the lone touchdown of the struggle. Wetzel missed the subsequent try at goal, making the score 6 to 0 in the Pikers' favor.

The quarter, in which the Pikers had had far the better of the argument, came to a close shortly after the following kickoff.

Second Quarter.

St. Louis began to show signs of aggressive attack at the offset of this second period and began to take advantage of their heavy forward defense. Speedy little Thole began the period by a sensational dash of 30 yards around W. U.'s left end, being finally stopped by Hetlage's neat tackle. Here St. L. U. first exhibited the Minnesota shift that they had been developing in secret previously, but it made scant headway on the initial trials and the ball went to Washington on its own 40-yard mark. The Piker backs began a march down the field by line plunges and circling the Billiken ends that was finally stopped when Capt. Nyquist intercepted a forward pass from Milford.

Aided by the big blue line, Thole and Maguire made 25 yards on three plays, but lost ground immediately on a fumble, forcing Thomas to punt to Milford, who put the ball in midfield by a speedy 20-yard return. Here the old shoestring trick again allowed Martin to put the ball 30 yards nearer the Billiken goal.

Hetlage, who had been putting up a splendid game, was stunned on this play and Coleman took his place. Three successive passes failed and the ball went to St. L. U.

Thomas made his first big gain on a nice 15-yard end run and Thole followed with a wide end run which Berry stopped with a clean diving tackle, that, incidentally, wrenched the little quarter's ankle enough to put him on the side lines for the balance of the game. Here the period ended.

Third Quarter.

Thomas began the second half in Thole's place at quarter while Connors filled Thomas' position at half.

This period proved to be largely a kicking duel, interspersed with short getaways by Thomas and Welch for St. Louis, and Potthoff and Milford for the Pikers. Washington had a splendid chance to score in the middle of this quarter when Milford threw a perfect pass over the goal line to Berry, but Maguire blocked it and the ball went to the Billikens on downs, Thomas booting the ball out of danger. The quarter ended without further scoring, the play having been for the most part in the blue and white territory.

Fourth Quarter.

The Pikers had their last chance to increase their lead in this quarter after the maroon backs had plugged the ball down to St. Louis U.'s 10-yard line, where two line plunges and two attempts at forward passes failed to net the required 10 yards and the ball went to St. Louis. On one of these attempted passes, Milford hurled a perfect throw to Bill Berry, who fumbled with a clear field ahead of him. More exchanges of kicks and see-sawing of the ball up and down the field occurred in this final period, with the Billikens showing a world of fight. Milford's pretty run of 20 yards in return of Thomas' final punt brought the game to a close, with the final count, Washington 6, St. Louis 0.

Six minutes before the tooting of the final whistle, of the Central High-Manual Training School football game at Robison Field, yesterday morning, left end Russell Nies of Central, captured a forward pass from Sil Merstetter and ran 40 yards for a touchdown. Sil Merstetter kicked the subsequent goal and Central won what looked like a tied game by the score of 7 to 0. Merstetter was standing on his own 40-yard line when he made the heave which was good for about 30 yards.

The game was hard fought from the very start to the end, but was loosely played and replete with fumbles, of which both elevens were guilty. Central showed a decided reversal of form over the game put up against McKinley last Saturday. The mid-city lads really looked worse than they have in any game this season.

Time after time the backs would rush the ball down the field and threaten the Manual goal only to fumble when within striking distance. Another grievous fault of the Walkerites was their tendency to muss up punts. In the course of the contest more than half of the kicks were fumbled. In several instances it looked as if the wrong play was called, spoiling roseate chances for tallying. All in all the Central team looked much under par.

Manual Much Improved.

The Manual team surprised. Three weeks ago the Training School lads were defeated by Soldan, 20 to 0. Central had been touted to roll up some 30 points against them. However Coach Thomas has rigged out a stronger defense and the gold and black team looked 50 per cent fitter yesterday.

In fact Manual lost an excellent opportunity for scoring immediately before Nies scored the touchdown. After hammering the Central line for long gains, the West Enders had the ball on Central's 30-yard line. A pretty forward pass to Baum was fumbled and Central recovered. Had Baum held the pigskin he probably would have been able to score as he had almost an open field.

Both lines held very well through the entire game and there were very few gains through smashing or bucking tactics. Central, especially, showed well in this respect and indeed held Manual at bay the greater part of the time.

Golterman Is Star.

However, there was one gold and black hosed warrior whom the high school team found it impossible to stop. Capt. "Chink" Galterman was easily the star on both defense and offense. He nailed every tackle that came within his radius and often made telling gains when carrying the ball.

For Central, Capt. Kalkman, center, and Nies were the individual luminaries. Kalkman evidently played about the best game of his entire career.

The first three periods were devoid of scoring, although both teams had several chances to score, only to spoil them by fumbling. Central started off with a rush and after the first three minutes of play had the ball on the Manual 20-yard mark, but lost the ball on a fumble.

The ball changed hands time to time and there were constant processions up and down the field.

Last Period Is Decisive.

More football was crowded into the last period than all previous three. The teams began to fight and played real football. After Central scored its touchdown, Manual braced and for a time rushed the high school lads off of their feet. It is not improbable that had the Manual quarterback opened up and used an entire open play that the score would have resulted in a tie. When the whistle blew the ball was in Manual's possession on Central's 30-yard mark.

A crowd of less than 200 turned out. The game was played fast and but little time was taken out.

Kentucky Easy for Purdue.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Nov. 7.—Purdue defeated Kentucky State today, 40 to 6. Kentucky was never in striking distance of the Purdue goal, except in the third quarter, when Coach Smith replaced the entire Purdue team with second-string players. It was then that Kentucky scored.

TIGERS OVERWHELM DRAKE TEAM WITH OPEN ATTACK, 32-6

Missouri Finds Eleven That Tied Washington, 7—7, Last Week, Easy Prey.

DES MOINES, Io., Nov. 7.—Missouri University overwhelmed Drake University this afternoon at Drake Stadium by a score of 32 to 6, in a game replete with good, bad and very poor playing. Drake lost many chances to score because of fumbling and poor playing, while penalties of 100 yards assessed against the visitors robbed them of at least one touchdown and gave Drake its only score.

After a scoreless first period Missouri opened up in the second quarter, when a forward pass for 20 yards, followed by plunges and end plays brought the ball to Drake's four-yard line, where Shepard was hurled across the remaining space for a touchdown. Lane kicked a perfect goal. Score: Missouri 7, Drake 0.

Lake Gets Touchdown.

The second score came after a series of line plays when the ball was on Drake's ten-yard line. Lake made a touchdown after Missouri had been penalized five yards for offside. Lake kicked goal. Score: Missouri 14, Drake 0.

Blackburn kicked off for Missouri. Two plays were snapped when the period ended with the ball in Missouri's possession. In the third quarter Miller went back in place of Graves and after line plays went over for a touchdown. Lake missed goal. Score: Missouri 20, Drake 0.

Drake kicked to Lake, who carried the ball to the center of the field, where Miller punted to Drake's 10-yard line. After a kick, the Missouri backfield plunged steadily down the field to Drake's one-yard line, where Drake recovered a fumble. Jernegan punted 30 yards and the quarter ended with the ball on Drake's 12-yard line.

Dunkel went over two yards for a touchdown almost immediately after the opening of the last quarter. Lake took Dunkel's place in the back field. Lake failed to kick goal. Score: Missouri 26, Drake 0.

Missouri kicked off to Drake, and the latter made 15 yards on a pass. Drumm of Missouri and Diltz of Drake were retired for rough playing and Herndon and Lewis took their places. Drake lost the ball on downs and Woody was sent over for a touchdown after the back had carried the ball to the five-yard line. Score: Missouri 32, Drake 6. Missouri kicked to Drake's 20-yard line and made another forward pass just before time was called. Score:

Billikens Have a Shade Over Pikers in Second Period

Pikers reeled off 117 and scored. The Billikens' interference was weak on wide end runs. The only advantage they gained was lost by a bad pass and fumble on a fake play from a kick formation. The play was called at a time when the team was getting its stride on rushing and seemed questionable generalship, even if the accident hadn't happened. As it was, it paved the way for a successful Washington raid on the St. Louis goal line.

Although Washington gained a total of four yards more, the second quarter clearly went to the Billikens. They started off with a rush. Several times they boxed the Piker ends, once permitting Foley to make a great run towards the right. It was here that the fatal attempt to kick from the shift formation halted to most promising advance. For a while the Billikens made their weight preponderance at center tell, Foley and McGuire bucking the line for substantial gains. Another bad pass in the shift formation robbed St. Louis of all hope for the quarter. In this period, McGuire, Thomas, Foley and the huge Pascall fairly outshone the Washington stars.

Washington Lacked Punch.

The Billikins might claim the third period by a shade, although a brilliant end run by Milford and a long forward pass by Pothoff almost equalized things. Pascall again smashed through the opposing line almost at will and was always right on the ball. McGuire, by a splendid run on a split play, took the ball into Washington's danger zone. After a brief exchange and substantial smashes by Thomas and Welch, the Billikens again lost the ball on a fake kick that didn't look too well timed.

Washington resumed the lead in the fourth quarter and twice threatened to score, but didn't carry the punch. Pothoff outdid himself in this period, running back punts. Washington's last chance to score was lost when McGuire blocked a forward pass on his own goal line.

It was a clean, sportsmanlike game throughout, each team being penalized three times. Each team was troubled with stage-fright at critical moments, Keogan's greener bunch showing somewhat more of it than the Pikers.

Princeton Never Within Striking Distance of Goal

come from behind. Come from behind they could not. Their game was "dead," try as they would, and the very sluggishness of their play came as a stunning surprise to those who have watched their work at Princeton; have seen the splendid material being shaped by first-class coaches and have understood just what was being done at Nassau.

For Princeton it was a revel of errors, for Harvard a frolic of daring plays superimposed upon the same canny generalship that has made the Crimson so hard to handle in recent years. In other things we have come to believe that nothing succeeds like success, but in football there is a growing belief that nobody succeeds like Harvard.

Harvard Kickers Excel.

Harvard's hard running backs could march over the chalk lines; Harvard had a drop-kicker in the person of Mahan, and could bring him up within drop-kicking distance, and Harvard had punters who could place the ball and could put them in situations where placing meant more than distance. More than once the Crimson drove down into Princeton territory and fell into drop-kick formation with downs to spare, which should have meant, to an eleven more alert than Princeton, a run. It did not mean that, apparently to the Tigers, so that touchdowns were made, and made rather easily, with the choice of a drop-kick in reserve.

The stadium apparently was a novelty to Ames. He caught kicks, but he could not get started with them. He seemed satisfied to get the ball any way he could. There were lapses in his generalship and worse in his individual play. In common with other Princeton backs, he got in the way of his own runners.

When that happened on the Princeton side the runner went down for a loss, backed up by his own interference. When Harvard now and again fell into the same error, the Crimson back simply kicked his erring interferer out of the way with probably not even a muttered apology and bowled along in the path he had chosen, which, much of the time, was a fairly open one, into the Tiger secondary defense, which, in common with most phases of Tiger football, was sadily out of kilter.

The difference was not purely physical. There was a vast gulf between the mental attitudes of the two elevens.

First Quarter.

Harvard won the toss and began to defend the west goal. Driggs kicked off to Logan on Harvard's 20-yard line. The ball was run back 15 yards. After one rush with slight gain, Harvard kicked to Princeton's 30-yard line. Princeton immediately kicked to Harvard's 45-yard line. Harvard retaliated by kicking on the first down to Princeton's 12-yard line.

After one rush Princeton kicked and Logan fumbled in the middle of the field. Princeton recovered the ball. On the first rush, Driggs was thrown for a loss of a yard. Glick could not gain through center. Driggs punted to Logan on Harvard's 15-yard line. There was no run-back. Bradley made two yards through center. Mahan kicked to Harvard's 35-yard line, Ames falling on the ball.

On the first down, the pass was poor and Harvard got the ball on Princeton's 45-yard line. Francke made six yards through center. On the second rush he added another yard. There was a Harvard fumble, but Mahan got the ball and ran to the 30-yard line for a first down. Francke could not gain and Logan made one yard. Mahan dropped back to the 38-yard line for a goal from the field. He missed it by five yards. Princeton put the ball in play on the 20-yard line. Driggs punted out of bounds on Princeton's 39-yard line, where it was Harvard's ball. Francke dove through center for four yards. He made a yard more on another plunge through center. Mahan made a first down on Princeton's 20-yard line. Two plunges into the Princeton line.

Mahan Kicks Goal.

Dropping back to the 33-yard line, Mahan dropped a goal from the field. On the kickoff, Hardwick took the ball, but fumbled on Harvard's 30-yard line, where Princeton recovered. On the first down, Driggs fumbled and the ball went to Harvard. There were two more fumbles and an exchange of kicks. Harvard captured the ball on their 25-yard line. Bradlee made six yards through center. Francke could not gain. Mahan punted to Ames on Princeton's 30-yard line. After exchanging kicks, it was Princeton's ball on their own 20-yard line. Driggs immediately kicked to Mahan on Harvard's 40-yard line. He was thrown without gain. On the first down Hardwick made 19 yards around right end. This was the longest run so far. Mahan dove through for three yards. On a fake Francke made six yards more.

Second Quarter.

Second period started with the ball on Princeton's 33-yard line. Bradlee made three yards. Then Harvard tried a forward pass, which was intercepted. Mahan dropped back, but missed a goal from the field from the 38-yard line, the ball being partially blocked. Princeton put the ball in play and at once kicked to Mahan, who caught it on the 30-yard line, running it back to midfield. Bradlee made three yards on the first rush and two on the second through center. Another Harvard forward pass failed. Mahan immediately kicked out of bounds on Princeton's 30-yard line. Driggs kicked to Logan on Harvard's 35-yard line.

The ball was run back to the middle of the field. Mahan kicked on the first down to Princeton's 7-yard line. Nobody touched the ball. The players lined up with the ball on the ground. Driggs kicked to Logan on Princeton's 35-yard line, where there was a fair catch. Mahan could not gain through center. Francke on a delayed pass carried the ball to Princeton's 22-yard line for a first down. Mahan made five more through center. Bradlee carried the ball to Princeton's 14-yard line. Francke made a first down on Princeton's 13-yard line. Francke dove through for two yards. Mahan added another.

Mahan Kicks Second Goal.

The ball was on Princeton's 10-yard line, nearly in front of the goal posts. Francke made two yards. Dropping back to the 17-yard line, Mahan dropped his second goal from the field with the ease of a Brickley. Driggs kicked off to Francke on Harvard's 10-yard line. The ball was run back to the 29-yard line. On the first down Hardwick skirted Princeton's right for 16 yards.

Francke could not gain through center. Bradlee made 12 yards through center. He lost his sweater in his efforts. It was Harvard's ball on Princeton's 33-yard line for a first down. Bradlee rolled off the Princeton line for five yards. Hardwick made a first down on Princeton's 18-yard line. Francke struggled through to the 16-yard line. Bradlee added two more yards. On a fake goal from the field Logan made a first down on Princeton's three-yard line. On the first play Francke made a yard. Bradlee carried it to the one-yard line for the third down. On the third down Bradlee went through for the first touchdown. Princeton tried to stop the play, but the Harvard halfback found a hole. Hardwick kicked goal. Score: Harvard 13, Princeton 0.

Third Quarter.

At the opening of the third period Law went in for Driggs and F. Trenkmann for Glick. It was Harvard's kickoff. Smith took Hardwick's place at Harvard's right end.

Mahan kicked off to Law on Princeton's 5-yard line. Law ran it back 25 yards. Law punted on the first down to Logan, who muffed and it was Princeton's ball on Harvard's 36-yard line. Tibbott could not gain around left end. Trenkmann made four yards through center. On a lateral pass, Ames to Law, there was no gain. Law tried a goal from the field from the 40-yard line. The ball fell short. Logan caught it and ran it back to the 30-yard line.

Mahan made three yards through center. He then kicked to Tibbott. There was a fumble on Princeton's 33-yard line, but Princeton recovered the ball. Law immediately kicked to Mahan on Harvard's 20-yard line. The ball was run back nine yards. Smith could not gain. Mahan immediately punted to Princeton's 28-yard line, where it was Princeton's ball.

Ames could not gain around left end. Law kicked to Mahan, who caught the ball on Harvard's 35-yard line and ran it back to midfield. Mahan kicked to Princeton's three-yard line. The referee declared it a touchback and Princeton put the ball in play on the 20-yard line. Law kicked to Hogan on Harvard's 45-yard line. Mahan's fair catch was interfered with and Princeton was penalized 15 yards. It was Harvard's ball on Princeton's 40-yard line. Francke made four yards on the first rush and two more on the second. Mahan almost made a goal from the field from the 44-yard line. The ball missed the goal posts by less than three yards.

Law immediately kicked on the first down to Harvard's 32-yard line. On the first down Mahan made four yards. He then kicked to Ames on Princeton's 15-yard line. The ball was run back 10 yards. Weston was injured. The big guard recovered quickly. Law kicked and the ball was partially blocked. Bradlee recovered it on Princeton's 43-yard line. Francke made four yards.

Mahan added four more. Mahan tried a forward pass to Smith, but failed. Mahan kicked in an effort to drop another goal from the field from the 46-yard line, failing by many yards. Law kicked to Mahan on Harvard's 40-yard line. The ball was run back four yards. Smith made four yards around Princeton's left end. Mahan gathered in eight yards for the first down. Bradlee ran through a big hole on the Princeton center to the Tigers' 25-yard line. Mahan gathered in three more. Francke carried the ball to Princeton's 21-yard line. Withington went in for Pennock. Francke planted the ball for a first down on Princeton's 16-yard line. On a fake attempt at a goal from the field, Bradlee carried the ball to Princeton's three-yard line for a first down. Francke gained a scant yard. On the third down, Francke carried the ball to within a foot of Princeton's goal line. Hardwick went in for Mahan. The third period ended.

Score—Harvard 13, Princeton 0.

Fourth Period.

The fourth period started. On the first rush Hardwick carried the ball over and then kicked goal. The score was: Harvard 20; Princeton 0.

Thereafter th game see-sawed, most of the play being in Princeton's territory.

Illinois U. President Proposes Big Football Game for War Refugees

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Nov. 7.—A post-season national championship football game between the East and West, to raise a half million dollars for the relief of Belgian refugees is the plan of President Edmund James of the University of Illinois, who today sought to persuade the Western conference to waive its rule against post-season games. Stagg of Chicago and Huff of Illinois, directors of the conference, have approved the idea and it is believed that Wisconsin, the third contender for the Western championship, also will approve.

If the conference's consent is gained, President James will open negotiations with Harvard, Yale and Princeton and the winner of their series will be asked to meet the big nine champions.

President James' plan is to have the game in the stadium of either Harvard or Yale, the proceeds above expenses to be turned over to the Red Cross society.

Commission Is Ready to Meet in Omaha

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 7.—The National Baseball Commission has prepared to hold a special meeting in Omaha next week, in the event developments at the meeting of the National Association of Minor Leagues should warrant calling the body together. President August Herrmann made a reservation of a parlor suite of five large rooms in a local hotel this afternoon. It is understood the entire membership of the National Commission will attend the meeting of the minor league magnates.

Demarest Defeats Cutler.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 7.—Calvin Demarest defeated Albert Cutler, 400 to 260, in a billiard players' league match here tonight. Averages and high runs: Demarest, 10, 10, 29, 139; Cutler, 9, 9, 39, 108.

YOST'S MACHINE TEARS PENN TEAM TO SHREDS, 34-3

Quakers, Bewildered by Open Attack, Are Crushed in Second Period of Intersectional Game.

MAULBETSCH IS STAR

Powerful Halfback, Who Worried Harvard, Finds Pennsy Line Easy to Penetrate.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Nov. 7.—Tearing Pennsylvania's defense to shreds in the second and third period, the University of Michigan football eleven won a 34 to 3 victory today. The size of the score was a surprise even to partisan Michigan rooters. Before the game Coach Yost predicted Michigan would win by a small margin.

Pennsylvania's only score was made in the first period. Merrill caught a Michigan punt near his own goal line. He dodged a Wolverine end and three times he wrenched himself loose from tacklers. He was finally downed on Michigan's 43-yard line and a moment later, after two short gains, Matthews drop-kicked a goal from the field.

Michigan's first touchdown, in the second period, was partly the result of Tucker's poor punt, which went out of bounds on Pennsylvania's 35-yard line. Catlett made the score and Hughitt kicked goal. Then Michigan opened up. Fake kicks, delayed passes and long forward passes from complicated positions seemed to demoralize Pennsylvania's secondary defense.

Penn Team Demoralized.

Benton made the second touchdown after receiving a long forward pass. Hughitt kicked goal. A similar play again brought the ball close to Pennsylvania's goal and Maulbetsch went across like a streak of lightning. Hughitt missed the goal.

Splawn's long punts which kept Pennsylvania on the defense during the second period, were also effective in the third. Hughitt made a touchdown after Maulbetsch and Catlett carried the ball to Pennsylvania's two-yard line. Maulbetsch made the final touchdown after carrying the ball nearly 40 yards on line plunges averaging from three to 10 yards. Hughitt again goaled.

Game Is Rough Throughout.

The game was rough. There were many penalties and each team suffered often.

Maulbetsch, Catlett and Merill were the stars on offense. Dorzias stopped several of Maulbetsch's rushes. Michigan's line held like steel and Pennsylvania made most of its gains on forward passes and running back punts.

The lineup:

Michigan. (34)	Position.	Pennsylvania (3)
Benton	L. E.	Hopkins
Reimann	L. T.	Henning
McHale	L. G.	Norwall
Raynsford (C)	C.	Journeay (C)
Watson	R. G.	Dorizas

Lyons	R. E.	Urquhart

Score by periods: Pennsylvania, 3 0 0 0—3. Michigan, 0 20 14 0—34. Referee—Walter R. Eckersall, Chicago. Umpire—David Fultz, Brown. Head linesman, Walter R. Okeson, Lehigh. Time of periods—15m. each. Michigan scoring: Touchdowns, Catlett, Benton, Maulbetsch (2) Hughitt. Goals after touchdown, Hughitt 4.

Pennsylvania scoring goal from field—Matthews. Substitutions—Michigan, Staats for Lyons, Catlett for Bastian, Hubel for Splawn, Bushnell for Cattlett. NORTHWESTERN LOSES; THIS TIME TO IOWA

EVANSTON, Ill., Nov. 7.—Iowa romped over Northwestern, 27 to 0, today in a contest which included as features, brilliant back-field work by the Hawkeyes and a gallant battle by the purple against a superior team. Weakened by the absence for the greater part of the game of Capt. Hightower, Northwestern was favored by fortune in other respects, while fumbles at critical periods nullified some of the Iowans' best attacks.

Gross and Parson each was credited with a run exceeding 60 yards.

Patterson's punting helped save Northwestern from a worse defeat.

Halligan Stars for Nebraska.

LINCOLN, Neb., Nov. 7.—Morningside College scored on the Nebraska football team today when the local team fumbled in the last minute of play. Morningside recovered and a forward pass for 33 yards sent Vernon over for a touchdown. The final score was: Nebraska 14, Morningside 7. Nebraska toyed with the Collegians throughout the game. Halligan's two long runs (one for 55 yards) for touchdowns for Nebraska were the features of the game.

Manhattan vs. Walnut Parks.

The Manhattans, winners of the championship in Hynes Soccer League last season, will meet the Walnut Parks in the feature game of the soccer double-header at Hynes Park, 7100 Florissant avenue, this afternoon. The game will be started at 3 o'clock. Hynes' Terriers will perform in the preliminary contest.

TIME IS RIPE FOR SELLING HORSES AND USING TRUCKS

Europe Is Paying High Prices for Draft and Riding Animals, Feed Is High, Gasoline Cheap.

Conditions are more favorable now than they have ever been for the adoption of motor trucks and delivery wagons by American business concerns, according to the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. The demand for horses and mules for export to Europe gives an unexpected chance for large users of horses to sell them at good prices and use the money to buy power equipment.

Representatives of the English, French and German governments, who are reported to have received orders during the last week in October for the purchase of 20,000 additional horses and mules, are reported to be paying a uniform price of $270 a head in East St. Louis. At Fort Worth, Tex., prices have advanced $17 over last year as a result of the demand. The first shipment on an order for 3000 started for Montreal last week. Trainloads of horses and mules are going from the West and Southwest daily to Canada and Atlantic ports. Germany is said to be offering from $500 to $800 for good horses.

Europe has already begun to drain the United States and Canada of their surplus grain crop, and prices of corn, oats and hay are certain to rise. Exports of oats from July 1 to Oct. 24 were 2,000,000 bushels—just double the exports for the corresponding period last year. So, it is going to cost more than ever before to maintain horses.

Motor trucks and delivery wagons, on the other hand, are better and cheaper than ever before, with list prices already fixed for the next 12 months. Gasoline is lower than at any time since the motor vehicle became a factor in transportation.

Rubber and rubber tires are also cheaper than heretofore, and with plantation rubber coming into market in ever-increasing quantities, continued reductions are anticipated.

HUPP SELLERS COMING TO MEETING AND DINNER

Charles E. Buck, advertising manager of the Hupp Motor Car Co. of Detroit, was in the city yesterday in consultation with the Weber Implement and Automobile Co., regarding the St. Louis Hupmobile convention to be held here Dec. 3.

The objects of the convention are to have every dealer in the St. Louis territory meet the officers of the Hup Motor Car Co. and to give them the opportunity of thanking their St. Louis distributer and every dealer in the territory for their part in making Hupmobile fall sales the largest the company ever experienced in seven successful years.

Among the officers who will be here Dec. 3 will be President J. Walter Drake, Commercial Manager F. A. Harris, Salesmanager Frank J. Mahoney, Manufacturing Manager S. H. Humphrey, Advertising Manager Charles E. Buck and a corps of mechanical experts.

The morning and afternoon sessions will be given up to discussing mechanical details, merchandising plans, advertising plans, meeting competition and a dozen other details of interest to every member of the Hupmobile family.

In the evening the Weber Implement and Automobile Co. will give their guests a banquet, in which some of the best-known local celebrities will speak, and there are rumors of all kinds of surprises and stunts to be pulled off during the evening.

GRAND PRIX RACE SET FOR FEB. 27 AT FRISCO

William L. Hughson, special racing commissioner, and Hollis E. Cooley, chief of special events of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, wired this week from San Francisco that the date of the International Grand Prix automobile race has been changed from March 6 to Saturday, Feb. 27.

This classic race, for the solid gold cup of the Automobile Club of America and a fortune in cash prizes, will be run over the same course as the Vanderbilt Cup race, inside the exposition grounds. The Vanderbilt will be staged on Washington's birthday, Feb. 22.

The fact that the two big contests are to be run at the exposition when hundreds of thousands of visitors are in San Francisco, means that the attendance at these races will doubtless break all records, eclipsing the enormous attendance in the old days when the classic Vanderbilt Cup race was held on Long Island.

The exposition boosters are planning a big party to go by special train to Corona, Cal., for the road races there on Thanksgiving day.

ANNOUNCES DETAILS OF NEW OVERLAND SIX

After cautious experimenting covering a period of many months, the Willys-Overland company is making public the specifications of its most recent achievement, a six-cylinder Overland. Since last summer's announcement that an Overland "six" would be ready some time this fall to sell for less than $1500, conjecture has been rife as to the probable mechanical details.

The exterior appearance of the car is essentially plain and simple. It has a roomy streamline body with long sweeping curves.

Electrically lighted and started, and completely equipped in every respect, the car sells for $14.75. The list of equipments is unusually long, including a two-unit electric self-starter; electric front, side, rear and dash lights; built-in windshield of the rain vision, ventilating type, magnetic speedometer, electric horn; mohair, one-man top and boot; robe rail, foot rest, tire carriers on rear, demountable rims, with one extra; full set of tools, tire repair kit, jack and pump. Tires are 35x4½ inches, with nonskid on the rear wheels.

A long wheel base of 125 inches has given the Overland engineers ample room for developing a large touring body, which, with its two extra seats, furnishes comfortable seating capacity for seven adults. The deep upholstery is of the finest grade of long-grain, hand-buffed leather, of a bright French finish, over resilient springs and soft, curled hair.

The proportion of power to weight gives a great surplus over that necessary to care for all emergencies of road driving. With a bore of 3½ inches and a stroke of 5¼ inches, the motor develops 45 or more horsepower, at a normal engine speed. Exhaustive road tests to which the car has been subjected show the motor to be smooth running, silent, flexible and economical.

CADILLAC EIGHT HAS FOUR CYLINDER HOOD

Now that the Cadillac "eight" is on display in St. Louis as well as at many points throughout the country, the general idea regarding the appearance of the car has been revised.

When it was announced that the new Cadillac would be an eight-cylinder car, many people gained the impression that the cylinders would be set in line, one after another, according to the usual practice with a multiple cylinder motor. This, of course, would have necessitated a hood of abnormal length.

As a matter of fact, the Cadillac cylinders are arranged in "V" form—four on the right side and four on the left, at an angle of 90 degrees to each other. The result is that the total length of the motor is no greater than that of the average four-cylinder engine; and the hood of the new Cadillac "eight" is no longer than that of last year's Cadillac. Thus perfect proportions are maintained between body and hood.

TRUCK A WAR NECESSITY

"The wonderful work of motor trucks in the European war is an object lesson in efficiency that is bound to impress itself upon American business men," says Secretary and Treasurer W. L. Kissel of the Kissel Motor Car Co.

"It is plain that the war could not possibly have been pursued on such a scale but for the quick method of transporting men, provisions and supplies through the use of trucks. Just as great an economy of time and effort is, as a matter of fact, being saved by Kissel Kar Trucks, and other good trucks, in many lines of business, but it is not brought home quite so strikingly."

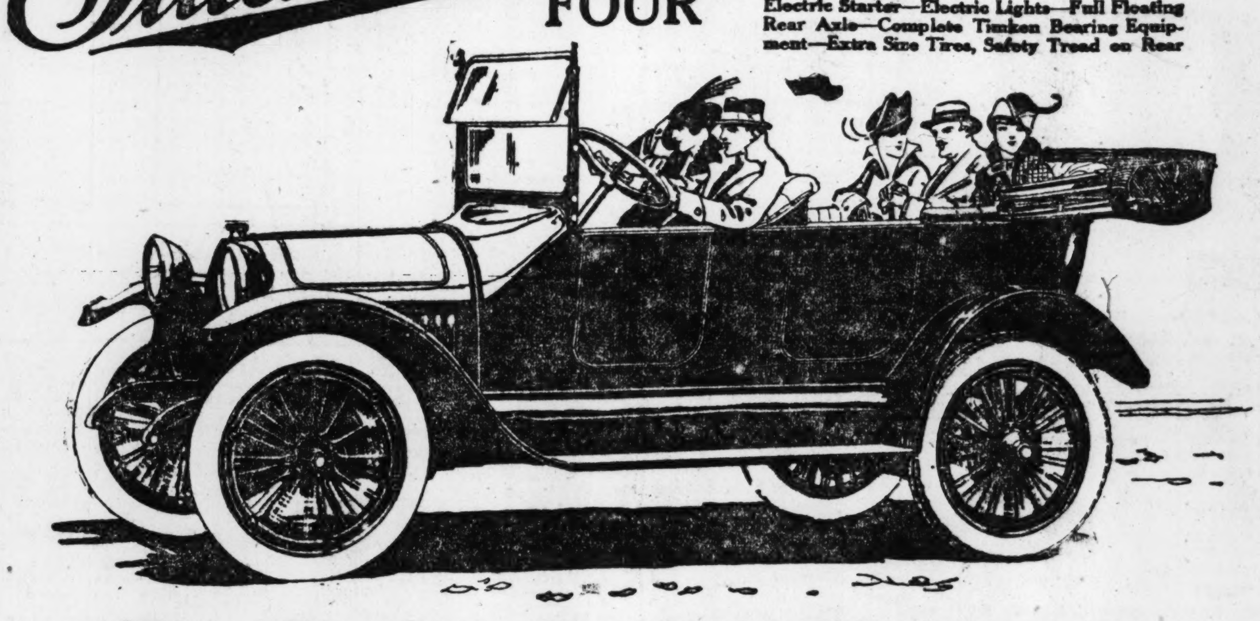
ADJUSTABLE SEAT PROVIDES GOOD BED

To the thousands of tourists who prefer the open air and camp life to hotel bills and waiter's tips, a seat feature of the new Maxwell car will be of interest.

The idea is only possible in cars equipped with the adjustable front seat. The 1915 Maxwell is equipped in such a way. By removing the four adjustable bolts, the entire front seat can be removed and a full-length bed provided. Not only is this idea practicable as a sleeping place for tourists, but a car with this equipment can easily be transformed into a temporary ambulance in case of accident on the road. The conversion interferes in no way with the steering of the car should occasion demand that the car be driven under these conditions.



Studebaker FOUR $985

Electric Starter—Electric Lights—Full Floating Rear Axle—Complete Timken Bearing Equipment—Extra Size Tires, Safety Tread on Rear

The Studebaker FOUR Appeals To You Instantly

ITS refined and beautiful lines satisfy at once your sense of car beauty.

The color and varnish work is so distinctly above the average that you notice it with gratification. The marks of the brush are not apparent—the color and varnish have been flowed on the surface and rubbed in through twenty operations. The color and varnish are satin-smooth, velvet-like—as perfect as the color and varnish work on a fine piano.

The fenders are of beautiful crown shape. Every line is a curve which blends harmoniously with the perfect symmetry of the body.

The running boards, covered full length with aluminum, are in studied unity with fenders and body lines.

This is the analysis of why the Studebaker FOUR appeals to you instantly, why it satisfies your sense of car beauty.

But think for a moment!

You Buy Time-Service with the Studebaker FOUR

Do you buy a Studebaker FOUR just because it is beautiful the day you take it out of the show room, or do you buy it for the service, for the pleasure, for the convenience, for the happiness of your family and for a thousand other appealing things which a motor car develops as you own and drive it?

If the first appearance, the first impression of your car, is the thing you buy it for, you are cheating yourself out of a large part of the real value of the Studebaker FOUR.

Your Studebaker FOUR is planned and manufactured for the service it will give you, for a year—two years—five years, after you buy it.

After the car has traveled ten thousand miles, its motor, if given a little care, will run as smoothly, as silently, as swiftly as it did the day you took it out of the show room. The springs will be as resilient, the whole car as tight and as noiseless, as the first day you drove up in front of your house.

Studebaker manufactures time-service into the splendid Studebaker steels.

The light, perfectly balanced reciprocating parts of the motor will give hundreds and thousands of miles of smooth, silent running efficiency.

The gears and axles likewise have the same quality of time-service manufactured into them.

Even the lustrous and beautiful body finish, if given reasonable care, will be bright and fresh for years after it has been exposed to rigorous service.

These are the things we want you to bear in mind when you buy your Studebaker FOUR.

These are the things which represent its real value to you.

These are the things which Quality means.

Remember that you are not buying a car just because it looks beautiful the day you take it out of the show room.

You are buying it for what it will look like and what it will run like after you have driven it a year, or two years, or five years. This is the time-service that is manufactured into Studebaker cars.

Studebaker cannot afford to build any other kind of a car.

This is what we mean when we tell you to BUY IT BECAUSE IT'S A STUDEBAKER.

SIX MAKES 28.7 MILES ON GALLON OF GASOLINE

Surprising results were obtained Tuesday in Chicago, when in a distance test on the boulevards, a 1915 big six went 28.7 miles on a gallon of Red Crown gasoline. The test was made to demonstrate the fuel of economy of high test gasoline, by the technical committee of the Chicago Automobile Club.

Red Crown gasoline, 58 test, was decided upon by the judges and drivers as the best gasoline to be used. All through the test the clutch was not slipped, except when traffic congestion made it necessary. The dash adjustment on the carburetor was disconnected, and in order that the test be a fair one, the fan was in operation throughout the run.

With the carburetor adjustment the same as during the economy run, the car was driven from standing start to 30 miles an hour in 12 4-5 seconds. The flexibility test saw the car run at four miles an hour, then speeded up to 44.

This test proves that the six is not an excessive fuel consumer, where the best gasoline is used.

AUTO SHOW REBATE BETTER THAN LAST YEAR

A meeting of the Show Committee and the board of directors of the St. Louis Automobile Manufacturers and Dealers' Association was held at the office of the Western Automobile Co. Saturday at 1 p. m. to audit the returns from the automobile show held in October. The accounts were closed up 10 days sooner this year than for the 1913 show and the rebate due to members will be paid by Wednesday.

The amount of the rebate will be slightly larger than was earned last year. According to the report of Show Manager Lee to the board, the expenses were considerably less than for last year, which more than compensated for the decrease in the amount received for space and in the sale of dealers' pay tickets. Treasurer Joseph A. Schlecht was instructed to make out rebate checks as quickly as possible.

SPACE DEMAND HEAVY AT NEW YORK AUTO SHOW

So great has the demand of motor-car makers been this season for space at the Fifteenth Annual National Automobile Show, in Grand Central Palace, New York, that for the first time four floors of the huge building will be utilized for the display of complete cars. The show is scheduled to open Saturday, Jan. 2, and will continue until Jan. 9. Even with four floors available, Manager Sam Miles and the Show Committee find that they are unable to accommodate all of the applicants for exhibition space. Heretofore the fourth story of the Palace has been exclusively for accessory exhibitors, but some of these will be obliged to do with smaller space than in former years in order to make room for the complete cars.

Already 548 exhibitors are on the list for these two shows, which is an unusually large number, and before the doors are open this number will be materially increased. Ninety-two complete car-makers are on the list for the New York show and 91 for Chicago. Thirteen motorcycle makers will be represented at these shows.

AUTOMOBILE BUSINESS BOOMS ON THE COAST

Although California has over 120,000 motor cars registered in that State at the present time, the 1915 season shows no slowing down of automobile sales, according to J. E. French, San Francisco representative for Dodge Bros.

"Dealers on the Pacific Coast are finding it difficult to secure enough cars to fill orders right now,' says Mr. French, "and we are looking ahead to one of our biggest selling seasons in 1915. The San Diego and San Francisco expositions will bring thousands of visitors to California, and we confidently expect to send many of those who come by rail and boat, home via the cross-country route in touring cars. California is leading the country in the making of good roads, $15,000,000 having been appropriated recently for this purpose."

Send for FREE 50c Package.

The time has come for goitre sufferers throughout the world to rejoice. Deliverance from the awful bondage is at hand. The fruits of modern, scientific research are no longer to be enjoyed by just a favored few, but any goitre sufferer—no matter how rich or how poor—may now take advantage of the treatment that has brought such "speedy and striking" results. Right in your own home, without the least pain or loss of time, you can carry on your decisive fight against that annoying, disfiguring and dangerous disease that now drags you down.

Like a Mill-Stone About the Neck, is the Burden of Goitre.

Remember, the claim that Kellogg's Sanitone Wafers are effective in goitre cases is based on high scientific authority. In referring to the drug that forms their principal ingredient, a noted physician and scientist, in a paper read before a large body of medical men, said: "in exophthalmic goitre, the rapid pulse and churning movement of the heart are invariably reduced to nearly normal; the pulse remains so * * * the trembling ceases, likewise the state of nervous erethism and irritability. The bulging eyes and struma (goitre swelling) recede."

He further says: "The cases treated have been, for the greater part, old, neglected or mismanaged ones. Fresh cases yield prompt results. Founding his opinion on this treatment, the writer cannot believe that surgical operation in this disease is proper. The risk to life and instability of the cure make such undertaking uncertain and extreme."

Don't depend upon the knife! Don't depend upon the palliative medicines! Go to the root of the trouble and correct and normalize the diseased thyroid glands, the swelling of which causes the goitre. Don't argue, don't "think it over a while," don't delay for any reason, but strike at the cause of your trouble now!

AUTOPIANO, 1914 - XX CENTURY

The Autopiano

The Autopiano has been endorsed by the Vatican, King Alphonso of Spain, such composers as Victor Herbert and such notable prima donnas as Luiza Tetrazzini and Mary Garden.

This means that from an artistic standpoint the Autopiano thoroughly satisfies.

Nearly every day Autopianos are shipped to Australia, Brazil, England, Greece, Turkey, Alaska, in fact to nearly every country under the sun.

No other player has such remarkable distribution the world over.

The Autopiano is constructed to stand the hot rays of the tropical suns, and strongly resist the freezing atmospheres of the Arctic regions.

Climatic extremes and geographical locations have absolutely no effect on the beautiful melodies, perfect phrasing and wonderful durability of the Autopiano.

The international awards which the Autopiano has received spell international prestige and international achievement.

It is neither accident nor luck that the Autopiano has had endowments and commendations from world-wide celebrities or notable composers and prima donnas, whose word is authority and final.

On over one hundred United States dreadnaughts, battleships, cruisers and torpedo destroyers on which Old Glory proudly flies, there are one or more Autopianos aboard.

If you have an old piano we will allow you for it all that it is worth on an Autopiano. Terms made to suit each purchaser.

The Autopiano

This marvelous twentieth century instrument that anyone can play means much in your home.

The Autopiano is the key for you to the vast realm of music.

You can sit at the Autopiano and play music no pianist has ever expressed. It is yours and it is you.

The mastery of a musical empire is yours with this wonderful instrument.

Any composition whatever can be rendered musically possible with the Autopiano.

There is no substitute for the refined influence of music. Bring Chopin, Beethoven, Wagner, Lizst into your home. Compositions of music masters of a century can be beautifully interpreted with the Autopiano.

Every possible selection, grand opera, classics, a wistful ballad, a stirring march, a patriotic chorus, every kind of music is splendidly rendered by this famous international player-piano.

The only way to appreciate the Autopiano is by hearing it played and playing it yourself.

This marvelous player-piano has won the commendation of music lovers the world over.

It perfectly satisfies and renders every kind of musical selection.

It can be played by anyone.

Wonderful expression device, a simplicity and durability of construction, a beautiful appearance, characterizes this famous player-piano.

The price of the Autopiano is exceedingly moderate, considering the generally acknowledged Autopiano quality.

24 rolls of music, stool, scarf and bench included with each Autopiano and you can exchange the rolls as often as you wish for 5 cents each.

EVOLUTION of the HOUSE of CONROY

When the House of Conroy was established in St. Louis, there were mule cars operated on Olive St. Since then there have been cable cars followed by small electric cars, until today we have the large electric coaches connected with immense trailers.

In the old days the mule cars were alright, but today they would never do. There has been great advancement in nearly all lines of endeavor. The changes which have taken place in pianos during this same period of time have been wonderful.

Mr. P. E. Conroy, the President of the House of Conroy since its existence, has ever made it a point to keep abreast of the times, and sell only pianos of reputation and quality. His slogan has been, "If anyone can show me better pianos than I handle, I will sell them."

The result has been the building up of the largest piano business in the Southwest. Twenty-five thousand St. Louis families will prove this statement.

In purchasing a piano from Conroy's you secure one of the world's best makes. When you enter the Conroy Store you find every instrument marked in large, plain figures, and you know that nobody can buy a piano for less than the price on the tag. Honest dealings and one price, with satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded, is always the rule at Conroy's.

As only about one person in ten is a judge of what a piano is worth, how important it is to trade with a house which carries only reliable instruments and sells them with this guarantee. A child can purchase a piano at Conroy's and receive the same value as the wisest adult.

Mr. Conroy stakes his reputation on the wonderful Autopiano and recommends it as the best player-piano on earth for the price.

MERAMEC HIGHLANDS "DRY" BY EXCISE RULING

County Authorities Close Saloon of B. J. Groth for Selling to Girls on Parole.

Meramec highlands is now dry territory without having been voted dry. The last saloon in the community was closed Friday by the St. Louis County Excise Commission, composed of Robert Fine and Clarence Shotwell.

The saloon was conducted by B. J. Groth. Six weeks ago one of the Commissioners visited Groth's place and found two girls, who had been paroled by the County Court, drinking at a table with two young men. Groth was cited and it was decided not to renew his license.

Last year there were two saloons and two summer gardens at the Highlands. The gardens were not permitted to renew their licenses and the proprietor of the saloon closed voluntarily.

Tenants get their first interest in most houses through the WANT COLUMNS of St. Louis' One Big Newspaper.

CHAUFFEUR ENDS LIFE

Alfred H. Heinsman, 38 years old and unmarried, was found dead at 9 a. m. yesterday in his room at the home of J. H. Smith, 6500 Elmwood avenue, by whom he was employed as a chauffeur. He had a revolver in his hand and a bullet wound in his head.

A note addressed to Mrs. A. T. Kelly, in care of C. M. Wells, Southbridge, Mass., said that circumstances beyond his control caused his act. An inquest was held by Coroner Bopp. Suicide was the verdict.

CHICAGO DEALERS INCREASE PRICES OF DRESSED MEAT

Packers Deny They Have Caused Advance and Say Supply Is Not Threatened.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 7.—Local wholesalers and retail butchers have taken advantage of the crisis at the stockyards to advance the prices of meats. The packers are emphatic in declaring that they have not advanced the prices to either the wholesalers or retailers. Lamb was jumped 3 cents a pound. Mutton was pushed up 2 cents, pork 1 cent and beef less than a cent. The butchers did not make a hit with customers when they predicted that beef would go up next week.

According to the butchers the packers have two weeks' supply of dressed beef. If the epidemic is not stamped out within that time, "there is no telling where prices may go," said Irwin Bros., wholesalers.

At the packers wholesale market today the prices were the same as yesterday. They were: Ribs, 19, 15, 9½ cents; loins, 24½, 17½, 11 cents; rounds 13, 11, 9½ cents; chucks, 12½, 11½, 10 cents; plates, 9½, 9, 8 cents. These are wholesale prices and retail prices exceed them about 30 per cent.

Packers Say Prices Should Not Rise.

Cudahy & Co. said: "The meat supply in Chicago today is well distributed and there should be no higher prices. By the time the supply becomes short the quarantine would be well over. Dressed meat from the West may be used to relieve the situation."

L. H. Hyman, secretary of Morris & Co., characterized all alarming reports as baseless. He said:

"There is nothing to be alarmed about. We have a good supply for immediate demands on hand. We are slaughtering at other points and shipping all the meat we need here. No advance has taken place and there will be no advance in wholesale prices, in my opinion."

Heads of departments at Swift & Co. denied that any addition had been made to wholesale prices because of the situation.

Disinfecting at the Union Stock Yards continued today in the expectation that the place would be in a thoroughly sanitary condition by the middle of next week.

"If we have thoroughly cleaned up by Wednesday and if the epidemic has not spread to more States, so that we can receive shipments of cattle, we shall apply for a lifting of the quarantine then," said A. G. Leonard, president of the stock yards.

Yards May Open Before Nov. 16.

Dr. O. E. Dyson, State Veterinarian, said that although the quarantine had been ordered to run until Nov. 16, it would be lifted before that time if it were shown that the yards were in a fair condition. All other public cattle pens within the State, including those at East St. Louis, are to be given a clean bill of health as soon as they are disinfected and pronounced free of infection.

As soon as the whole State is cleared, application will be made for a lifting of the Federal quarantine which prohibits shipments of livestock. No action will be taken, however, until the State and Federal authorities are convinced that Illinois is in no danger of further contributing to spread the epidemic about the country. Every confidence that the disease is well under control here was expressed after it was found that only a few more suspected cattle have developed cases. All the regularly-shipped cattle had been slaughtered and a few stockers and feeders which were to have been shipped from Chicago were found in a sound condition.

The new cases were among prize cattle recently exhibited at the National Dairy Show here. About 30 out of the 800 prize bulls and cows were condemned, but were not killed. The owners of the cattle appealed to the Department of Agriculture at Washington that special efforts be made to save the stock. A plan was devised to isolate the infected stock for experimental purposes in the hope that it may be saved.

EAST SIDE YARDS TO REOPEN SOON

The National Stockyards in East St. Louis, closed yesterday under quarantine by Federal order as a measure against foot-and-mouth disease in cattle, probably will reopen at the end of this week, according to a statement made last night by the president of the yards, C. T. Jones.

Jones said the State Board of Live Stock Commissioners assured him the quarantine would be removed as soon as the task of cleaning all of the pens and spraying them with disinfectant is completed. This work will be concluded, Jones predicted, by Thursday night.

Yesterday 800 men, with 50 teams and four gas engines for spraying disinfectant, were at work cleaning the 3000 cattle pens in the yards. Each night, beginning tonight, 300 men will work all night at the task, and tomorrow the number of teams will be increased to 65.

The packers, who already had 10,000 cattle on hand, took over the 10,000 in the yards, so that the pens are completely empty. The job of slaughtering these 20,000 cattle will be completed tomorrow night, and then the 9000 employes of the packing houses will be set at cleaning and disinfecting the packing plants.

About 48 cattle speculators, operating at the yards, were hard hit by the quarantine. It is their custom to hire three or four pens each, buy from 10 to 50 cattle, fattern them for a few days and then ship them out at advanced prices. When the quarantine came down upon them they had on their hands about 1800 head of cattle which they were obliged to sell immediately to the packers for what they could get, as it was forbidden to ship them from the yards. Some of the smaller speculators declared they had been ruined financially by the quarantine.

An interstate quarantine against hay, as a possible carrier of foot-and-mouth disease, went into effect Friday, prohibiting its shipment from Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan, Pennsylvania and New York. This order does not prohibit shipments from one point to another in Illinois, as the Federal Government has no jurisdiction over intrastate shipments.

The quarantine at the stockyards will not affect the sale of horses to foreign governments, as horses are immune to foot-and-mouth disease. This is a malady which causes the hoofs of cattle to rot, and their mouths to become covered with blisters.

Wholesale Meat Prices at Omaha Are Increased.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 7.—The scarcity of fresh meats due to the "foot and mouth" disease in cattle has already caused an increase in the wholesale price of fresh meats and still further advances are expected by the packers at South Omaha.

Pork loins that sold Thursday at 14½ cents per pound, went to 16½ today. Spareribs advanced from 11½ to 12½. Beef loins, that sold for 17 cents Thursday are today bringing 12 to 18 cents. Beef ribs went up 1 cent on all grades. The general advance on pork is 2 cents and on beef 1 cent. Another advance will probably be made Monday.

BAD BREATH

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets Get at the Cause and Remove It.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel, act gently on the bowels.

People afflicted with bad breath find quick relief through Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. The pleasant, sugar-coated tablets are taken for bad breath by all who know them.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets act gently but firmly on the bowels and liver, clearing the blood and gently purifying the entire system.

They do that which dangerous calomel does without any of the bad after-effects.

All the benefits of nasty, sickening, griping cathartics are derived from Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets without griping, pain or disagreeable effects of any kind.

Dr. F. M. Edwards discovered the formula after seventeen years of practice among patients afflicted with bowel and liver complaint with the attendant bad breath.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are purely a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil. You will know them by their olive color.

Take one or two every night for a week and note the effect. 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

LINEMAN KILLED WHERE CABLEMAN WAS HURT FRIDAY

Theodore C. Clark Plunges 30 Feet, Neck Is Broken After Severe Electric Shock.

Theodore C. Clark of 864 Providence street, Webster Groves, lineman for the Bell Telephone Co., was instantly killed yesterday when he came in contact with an electric light wire carrying 2300 volts of electricity and fell 30 feet from a pole at Manchester and Taylor avenues, where Albert Korches of 3943 Ohio avenue, a cableman, received a severe shock Friday.

A. W. Metzger, district inspector for the telephone company, said employes who inspected the scene of the two accidents reported that an electric light wire, on the same pole with a telephone wire, was bare of insulation for about 10 inches near the pole and that the bare wire showed evidences of flesh having come in contact with it. The insulation was old and had peeled off, he was told. Union Electric officials said their inspectors reported wires at this place in good condition.

Many poles carry both telephone and light wires, and on this particular pole the light wires are strung below the telephone wires, so that a workman, to reach the telephone wires, must pass between the light wires. Clark had been sent to the place to repair a telephone wire and had rached a platform 30 feet from the ground. The fall broke his neck. Dispensary physicians were unable to determine if the electric shock had killed him before he struck the ground.

Korches, whose shock Friday caused him to be sent to the City Hospital in a serious condition, was working at the cable box and was prevented from falling from the platform by John Reith, a fellow-workman.

Clark was 28 years old and was married only a month ago. Korches is 19.

FEW CLUBS SELL ENOUGH DRINKS TO MAKE LICENSE PAY

Managers Assert Bars Bring No Profit as Use of Liquor Is Becoming Less Popular.

'Black Cow'' Now Most Popular Country Club Drink

THE reign of the "Black Cow" at country clubs near St. Louis is expected to result in decisions by several of them not to obtain liquor licenses, and the consequent service only of soft drinks. In such clubs, however, members may have liquor in their lockers.

The "Black Cow," the invention of which is attributed to "Chick" Evans, has become very popular with golf players. It consists of a bottle of sarsaparilla poured into a tall glass, in which is about one-third as much cream. It is especially recommended for use at the ninth and eighteenth holes.

Midland Valley Country Club officials have discovered that more than one-half of the bar revenue of the club came from sales of the "Black Cow" and other soft drinks. For that reason members are doubting the advisability of obtaining a liquor license.

The "Black Cow" is much the same as the "Jersey Cow," which has been sold in saloons for several years. The only difference is that in the "Jersey Cow" milk instead of cream is used.

Whether the privilege of selling five cases of bottled beer a week and an occasional highball or old-fashioned toddy justifies the expenditure of $300 a year for a dramshop license is the weighty question which directors of the Mercantile Club will consider at a special meeting next Tuesday.

Other clubs are in a similar quandary, because drinking is not so popular as it once was. Thus far the Noonday Club and the Missouri Athletic Association are the only big clubs which have signified their intention of taking out dramshop licenses, as the Supreme Court recently decided clubs must do if they sell liquor.

Managers of several clubs yesterday said the profit in selling drinks to members is so small that the money invested in a saloon license would be almost a total loss.

At the Mercantile Club yesterday it was said that sales of intoxicants to members have not shown a profit for several years and that the custom of drinking at the club is steadily declining. Even at formal dinners wine is no longer considered a necessity.

100 Drinks a Month.

At the City Club, where hundreds of representative business and professional men congregate for luncheon every day, only 100 drinks were ordered from the service bar all last month.

Since it was opened in January, 1911, the City Club has sold only $4188.44 worth of intoxicants. In the four years the club management estimates it has lost $98.02 on its bar business. Receipts from sale of cigars amounted to more than three times the receipts from drinks in the last year.

These figures were sent to every member of the club yesterday and each member was asked to vote as to whether it would be advisable to take out a dramshop license.

At the St. Louis Club, whose Olive street entrance formerly was facetiously called "High-ball Alley," it was said there had been a marked falling off in the demand for drinks and that several times in the last year the monthly balance has shown a deficit in the bar department. In only a few recent years has the club bar yielded sufficient revenue to offset the cost of a dramshop license and still leave a profit, it was said. Members of the St. Louis Club have appointed a committee to consider the advisability of taking out a license. Similar action has been taken by the University Club, where, according to officials, the sale of drinks has never netted a profit to the club.

Country Clubs May Get Licenses.

Though the volume of drinks sold at the Racquet Club and some of the country clubs is large, it was said by club officials that the cost of service is also great and that if the sale of drinks were discontinued the salary account for help might be reduced.

Sheriff Bode of St. Louis County has notified all clubs, including "lid" clubs and country clubs, to comply with the Supreme Court decision by taking out saloon licenses or closing their bars.

The St. Louis Country Club never has made known the amount of its revenue from intoxicants, but a member yesterday said it was probable the club would take out a dramshop license because many members who go there to play golf and polo feel the need of liquid refreshment after indulging in outdoor sports.

The Glen Echo Club yesterday stopped serving liquor pending further consideration of the final action to be taken.

CARTHAGE STONE FOR INTERIOR OF CAPITOL

Sub-Contractor Under Gill Closes Deal for Material for State House.

JEFFERSON CITY, Nov. 7.—E. W. Stephens, chairman of the Capitol Commission, announced today that H. A. Farley, who has the subcontract under R. A. Gill for the stone work on the interior of the new State House, had closed a deal with the Carthage quarries whereby they are to furnish the stone for the interior.

The cost of furnishing and dressing the interior stone amounts to about half of the total cost of stone in the building, and indicates, either that Gill has agreed to pay the higher price demanded by the Carthage quarries or that they have met the bids of the Cassville quarries.

Gill notified the commission today he has shipped stone for the sample wall 100 feet square which the contract requires, and that it will arrive here in a few days.

ROOSEVELT NOT 1916 CANDIDATE, SAYS HOTCHKISS

Progressive Ex-Chairman in New York Asserts Colonel Told Him So.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt will not seek to be a candidate for the presidency in 1916, ex-Chairman William H. Hotchkiss of the Progressive State Committee announced today. At his office, 55 Liberty street, Hotchkiss said:

"It is asked if the result of the election eliminates Col. Roosevelt.

"I know that Col. Roosevelt will not be a candidate for President in 1916, and you can eliminate a man who isn't a candidate. I know that the Colonel has no idea of running two years from now, because he told me within a week after the election of 1912 that he would not. We discussed together a number of men as possibilities for the Progressive nomination for President in 1916. The Colonel desires to occupy the position of a philosopher and not of a potential office seeker.

"As to the Progressive party as an organization, I have frequently expressed my views; as to the Progressive movement, I am confident that if not in two years then in six years it will be the dominant factor in American politics. This may come through the Republican party; it may work out through the Democratic party, but if neither of the old parties becomes sufficiently progressive, then either the present Progressive party or some other party embodying its principles will be put in charge of the Government."

EIGHT PERSONS ARE HURT IN SIX AUTO ACCIDENTS

Negro Drives Away After Collision in Which Girl Suffers Concussion of Brain.

Eight persons were injured yesterday in six automobile accidents, two of which were caused by machines skidding into each other on slippery streets as a result of the rain at night.

Mary Kohler, 4 years old, of 5818 Bartmer avenue, was seriously injured at 4 p. m. when an automobile of Claude D. Hall, an attorney of 5920 Plymouth avenue, in which she was riding, was struck by another machine, driven by a negro, at Minerva and Belt avenues. A physician said she was suffering from concussion of the brain. The negro drove away after the accident.

Henry J. Gerling, 44 years old, of 3508 Henrietta street, his wife, Mrs Bernice Gerling, 42, and Frank Gerling, 75, of 3646 McRee avenue, were injured at 6:45 p. m. when riding in an automobile driven by John Gerling, 21. A machine driven by William K. Weston, 35, of 1228 Shawmut place, skidded on the slippery pavement on Grand avenue near Meramec street and collided with them. Henry J. Gerling suffered internal injuries, his wife a broken left collar bone and Frank Gerling scalp wounds.

Thomas Lee, 44 years old, of 1207 Blair avenue, was slightly injured at Washington avenue and Eleventh street at 9:45 p. m. As he was crossing the street a machine driven by Albert Hemholt, 3119 Arsenal street, skidded, the rear end striking Lee.

James H. Blythe, 52 years old, of 615 North Theresa avenue, reported he had been run down at 5:30 p. m. at Theresa avenue and Washington boulevard by an eastbound automobile. He said the license number was 10,166 and that the driver, after inquiring if he was hurt, drove away. George Burke of 2521A North Twenty-first street, holder of license No. 10,166, was arrested.

Elsie Bergman, 17 years old, of 2925 North Twenty-third street, alighted from a street car at Twelfth and Olive streets at night and was crossing the street when she stepped in front of Fire Chief Henderson's automobile, driven by Charles Money. She suffered bruises, cuts and from the nervous shock.

Webler Ayer, 9 years old, of 3435 McKean avenue, was knocked down and injured at Grand and Laclede avenues at 6 p. m. by an auto driven by Albert G. Blanke, 3241 Copelin avenue, a realty dealer.

FLOWERS BRING $2532 FOR OLD PEOPLE'S HOME

One Woman Asks for Policeman to See Money Counted and Six Arrive in Wagon.

The flower sale conducted on the streets yesterday by 250 girls and matrons for the benefit of the Old People's Christian Home, at 3017 Morgan street, netted $2532.94. This is $400 more than was received from last year's sale.

Mrs. W. E. Harrison, treasurer of the home, who has had the station at the west end of Eads Bridge at each of the three annual sales, led in sales for the third consecutive time, with $41.08. Mrs. E. A. Barnett, stationed at the Washington University-St. Louis University football game, was second, with collections totaling $40.97. Mrs. F. E. Eddelman, with $38.45, was third.

Most of the flowers sold were carnations and chrysanthemums. A few roses also were sold. Buyers dropped their money into sealed boxes carried by the workers. There were 300 of these boxes.

It has been customary each year when the boxes are opened to have a policeman present. When Mrs. A. E. Morgan called the Police Department last night and asked that an officer be sent to the home, her request was answered by the arrival of a patrol wagon and six policemen, responding to what they supposed was a riot call.

2 INCHES OF BOY'S SKULL REMOVED TO SAVE BRAIN

Rare Operation at City Hospital Stops Hemorrhage Caused by a Horse's Kick.

Two square inches of the skull of Hyman Hoffstein, 5 years old, of 1924 Biddle street, were removed by physicians at the city hospital last night to relieve a pressure on the child's brain, caused a few hours before by a horse kicking him on the head.

No silver plate was inserted as a cover for the brain. The physicians said that because of the child's age the skull probably will grow to cover the space of the removed skull. After the operation the pulsations of the brain could be seen through the skin over the space of the removed skull. When the physicians started the operation they found the boy also was suffering from a hemorrhage of the brain, but they succeeded in stopping it.

Hyman, in the afternoon, was playing in the yard in the rear of his home when a horse, owned by Barney Finkelstein of 1926 Biddle street, and which had strayed into the Hoffstein yard, kicked the child on the right side of the top of the head. The boy was knocked to the ground unconscious and he was taken to the hospital, where it was decided to operate immediately. The boy's skull was fractured in four places.

SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH'S REVIEW OF MARKET CONDITIONS

NEW YORK BANKS AGAIN MAKE A GOOD SHOWING

Loans Decrease Over $11,000,000 and Reserves Record a Small Gain.

EXCHANGE RATES WEAK

Export Situation Shows Further Improvement on the Week.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—The Evening Post, in its weekly financial review, says:

"With the ending of the moratorium at London and the partial modification of the moratorium at Paris, a good deal has been accomplished within the last few days towards bringing about conditions of normal trading in the great foreign markets.

"There has been a decided increase in the supply of exchange offered, and without resort to international agreements of the sort proposed a few weeks ago, foreign exchange rates are fast becoming normal once more. The prevailing rate for sight drafts on London is now only 3 cents above the quotation which often rules at this time of the year. With this betterment in the market for international remittances, the whole financial situation has been helped.

"Enlarged buying of supplies in this country by representatives of France, England and Germany, has been an important factor in depressing the price of foreign exchange and in strengthening this country's foreign trade position.

"Within the last few days exchange on Germany has touched a new low level for the war period, 88⅝, and conditions show that international bankers of this city have today the lowest balances at Berlin and Hamburg that they have held there in years.

"What is more, this buying of supplies is bound to continue and the chances are that it will become a much more important factor before the year ends. It is evident also that American mills will receive heavy orders from foreign markets which were ordinarily supplied by the manufacturers in the countries at war.

Big Loans to Be Financed.

"Under these circumstances, it is natural that the foreign buyers should have sought to build up heavy credit balances in the United States for recourse to in paying for the supplies purchased.

"These advances represent nothing more than temporary loans, which foreigners secure here pending the period which must elapse before their own investors are able to put in their subscriptions for the large war loans which are in process of negotiation abroad.

"All the billigerent nations will have to arrange such loans in the near future, and the recent proposal in England to bring out a $1,000,000,000 issue of 4 per cent bonds is suggestive of a tendency which is being followed everywhere in the territory where warlike conditions prevail.

"Most of the credit balances arranged with bankers here have been negotiated through the sale of note issues running for periods ranging from three months to one year.

"The chief event of the week was the general elections of last Tuesday, which resulted in a notable victory for the Republicans. Wall street was prepared for some reduction in the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives, but it was hardly prepared for the striking changes shown.

"What happened was largely accounted for, however, by the resentment usually shown by the voters at a time when the country is suffering from a business reaction. The party in power may be in no way responsible for the hard times, yet it nevertheless has to take the blame, although the results are not always the same.

"In general it may be said that the financial community was, if anything, reassured by the election results, for the reason that it immediately reached the conclusion that with the Democratic majority in the House so greatly reduced, it would prevent the adoption of any very radical legislation.

"The statement given out by administration officials emphasized the desire of the administration to pursue a definitely constructive policy from now on, and indicated that with the enactment of the tariff and the currency laws Congress would have more time in future to attend to routine business.

Bond Market More Active.

"There has been enlarged buying by investors, and the inquiry for high-grade short-term notes, such as the New York City issues, was the best that has been seen at any time since the Stock Exchange went temporarily out of business. A feature of this absorption of these securities has been the broad buying of safe municipal issues.

"This buying has been the best that has been seen at any time since the taking effect of the income tax law created a wholly unexpected demand for high-grade municipal bonds.

"Besides the buying by individuals, there has been large absorption by institutions, and the total demand has been much the best that has been seen at any time for six months.

"All the funds required to make up the first installment for stock of the 12 regional banks has been paid over this week. The banks will start with an initial paid-in capital of about $18,000,000 which, with reserve deposits of about $25,000,000, will be sufficient to enable the banks to transact a pretty large business from the start.

"Much depends, however, on the action taken by the Federal Reserve Board, with reference to the acceptance of commercial paper as a basis for rediscounts. The board will have to announce its ruling very soon, and the indications are that a good portion of the commercial paper that was put up as security for the emergency notes will be used as a basis for the rediscount operations.

"The situation is full of interesting possibilities and, although a good deal of detail work has to be done, the chances are that the banks will be started without difficulty, and that they will take over a large portion of the business formerly handled by the heavily capitalized Wall street institutions."

FOREIGN BANKS RECORD STRONG WEEKLY REPORTS

Bank of England and Germany Again Add Largely to Gold Reserves.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and New York World.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The moment has arrived when Europe keenly must recognize the ultimate cost of the war Even to date the cost is estimated at £1,000,000. Our actual expenditures so far have been about £100,000,000.

"The ultimate crisis will reach its maximum severity in Germany and France. In regard to the latter country, however, the conditions will be somewhat relieved by the solidarity of the people. In the near future the allies will witness some large loan operations. There is good reason for stating that our own operation will reveal the necessity for carrying enormous supplies of gold.

"The position of the Imperial Bank of Germany is peculiar. It is fairly strong from the standpoint of gold held. There are, however, distinct indications of an impending strain upon Germany's external and international credit. It is being commented upon also that the German trade figures and the private bank returns are conspicuous by their absence.

"Our strong bank return of last Thursday was largely due to the receipt of £8,000,000 gold imported from Russia. This was part of a large operation.

The Stock Exchange Plan.

"The Stock Exchange relief scheme means that the banks cannot call loans secured by Stock Exchange collateral until a year after the war, while the State advances, where required, 60 per cent against such securities.

"Public clients, by advancing a small percentage of the loans as cover, can have commitments carried at July 27 prices, until a year after the war.

"There is no sign yet of the reopening of the Stock Exchange on any basis which would increase the possibility of the belligerent nations obtaining funds, under cover of sales made through neutral countries.

"Under normal conditions it is felt here that your election results would cheer your people. It is believed here, however, that the European war and its complications must be the overshadowing influence in the United States as elsewhere, and that, under the circumstances, your people would not wish to do anything which would tend to weaken the administration.

"Business men are glad at the prospect that your foreign exchange problem will be mainly solved without recourse to artificial means. If Sir George Paish's visit has convinced the United States of our desire to cooperate in any reasonable plan for cementing and extending the cordial commercial relations between the two countries, his mission has fulfilled only the expectations of our business community."

BIG SALES ARE WEEK'S FEATURE IN COTTON TRADE

Liverpool Sells 19,400 American Bales in One Day; Export Demand Much Stronger.

Sale of Cotton Paves Way for Exchange to Open.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—Federal Judge Mayer signed an order today, permitting the sale at 9c a pound, of 80,000 bales of cotton owned by the suspended firm of S. H. P. Pell & Co., to a cotton corporation syndicate. This decision left the New York Cotton Exchange free to decide upon an early date of reopening.

The most remarkable feature of the cotton market during the week was the big sales of cotton. In Liverpool, Wednesday, 21,300 bales, including 19,400 American, were sold. It is possible that the defeat of British war vessels off the coast of Chile may have stimulated this demand. Whatever the cause, the effect remains unchanged.

Up to the present time, including cotton now on the seas, England has imported from this country 295,861 bales, as compared with 1,031,370 for the same period last season. On July 31 the stock of American cotton in Liverpool was 618,000 bales, and the stock afloat was 35,000 bales—a total of 653,000 bales.

Today, in the face of a decided falling off in imports, nearly 750,000 bales, these stocks have decreased but little, which shows that the English mills are running on very short time or buying little and using stocks of cotton that are in the mills. If English mills are running proportionate to their imports of American cotton, it would be about on one-fourth time. Increased exports of American cotton to Great Britain indicates, however, that those mills are coming into the market and English cotton importers are preparing to supply them.

The general improvement in the exchange markets in this country and Great Britain will aid the cotton business materially. The fact that England is an export country and dependent largely on bills of exchange, has made the position of cotton merchants in Liverpool uncomfortable, as their business requires them to get their purchases of cotton released on acceptances of 60-day bills. Lack of bills of exchange, drawn against exports, makes business almost impossible. Sales of cotton in Liverpool for the week reach a total equal to sales under normal conditions, due to heavy sales the last half of the week.

The Liverpool Cotton Association opened the market Friday for restricted trading in May-June, for liquidation of old contracts; that is for new buying, but no new selling, with the minimum price fixed at 4.25d for American cotton and 6.95d for Egyptian. On Friday the market opened at 4.40d, sold as high as 4.45d and closed at 4.34d for May-June. Saturday the market opened at 4.39d and closed at 4.34d.

The weather during the week has been such as to aid greatly the picking of cotton. Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway officials estimate that 75 per cent of the Texas crop has been gathered and about one-third of it sold. The demand for cotton has been very good all over the cotton belt and prices have continued to advance. In none of the principal cotton centers is middling quoted at less than 7 cents per pound. The movement of cotton is increasing and the into-sight movement is beginning to compare more favorably with the movement last season.

Exports to France are heavier, and to Japan, too, as well as to Great Britain, and the increase in value as well as in volume of exports will wield a favorable influence on the market. American mills are doing a profitable business and show a better disposition to buy cotton. Canadian mills are beginning to take cotton a little more freely. The demand is wider. Financial conditions are easier and a further improvement is expected. This is reflected in the cotton markets. Exports of commodities other than cotton during the month of October were heavy, as was the case in September. In September, 1914, exports exceeded those of September, 1913, by about $125,000,000, which more than offset the loss on account of lack of export of cotton, so far as current trade balance is concerned.

The main issue in the cotton market is available funds with which to carry the crop. The size of the crop is not the depressing feature of the market; it is the quantity of cotton pressed for sale that determines the price. A real holding movement, one that can be sustained, will maintain the price of cotton. Cotton is now selling at 2 cents per pound higher than around the middle of this month in 1898. The present price has been made possible by a better understanding of banking than obtained at that time.

The course of cotton prices during the past month indicates that the speculative public regards cotton as an excellent investment at anything under present values, and good buying is likely to develop on any recession. There are to be found a good many mill buyers who are of a pessimistic turn of mind, and they believe that cotton prices will go to the dogs. But the more conservative can see an excellent profit in cotton bought at present levels and are buying heavily.

The situation in the spot cotton market is good, and the inauguration of the reserve banks will give a solid basis for values. Loans are now being made at $30 a bale, basis middling.

CATTLE MARKET IS LOWER, DUE TO QUARANTINE

Decline Less Than Anticipated, However, Best Beeves Bringing $10.50 Top Price.

Receipts at National Stock Yards.

	This Week.	Last Week.	Year Ago.
Cattle	30,000	22,465	28,730
Hogs	60,000	56,378	42,057
Sheep	15,000	12,917	22,311
Horses and mules....	3,500	2,438	4,293

Cattle receipts during the week were generous in volume, being heavier than the run of the preceding week, but still lighter than that of a year ago. The beef steers supply was generous and the quality fair, although nothing strictly prime was available. Conditions were adverse to the selling side and consequently the market was lower, although not so bad as sellers expected. The quarantine imposed on the market by the Government prohibiting the shipment of cattle from the market because of the foot and mouth disease, materially curtailed the demand and buying was largely in the hands of packers. Local traders and shippers were practically out of the market at all times. Therefore, it was surprising that prices did not drop still lower. Strictly good beef steers were steady, with several loads selling at $10.25@10.50, the latter being the week's top price. Medium and common steers, however, were at 25@35c lower in most instances.

Trade in butcher classes, and particularly in heifers, also was on a lower basis. The supply was excessive, because the only buyers operating were packers. Outside, butchers and local traders did not purchase because they were unable to ship out what they did buy. The demand was therefore limited and competition meager. Medium-grade heifers suffered most during the week, declining 35@50c generally. Strictly good kinds were close to steady. Cows were in much the same shape as heifers, although the decline on them did not amount to more than 15@25c. Bulls were steady to 10@15c lower, medium grade bulls showing the loss. Vealers were about steady all during the week, although toward the close there was evidence of a 25@50c decline. The top price was $9.50.

Stockers and Feeders Sacrificed.

There was absolutely no trade in stockers and feeders because of the quarantine, and therefore it was impossible to compare the trade with that of the previous week. Local traders did not purchase anything and lots of stockers and feeders went to killers at a great sacrifice. Shippers have been warned to keep stock and feeding cattle off the market until the situation is normal, as they will either have to be carried at the yards, which is an expensive process, or go to killers at absurdly low prices.

Runs in the quarantine division were only moderate, but showed a good increase. Southeastern territory contributed the bulk of the supply, with a small representation from Oklahoma.

Order buyers were out of the market all week, being unable to get purchases out. Consequently packers did all the buying. However, steers were wanted and sold mostly on a good, steady basis. Canners and she-stuff were about 15c lower. Yearlings and heretics sold at 15@25c lower, in most cases, although there were times when the decline looked more than that.

Hog Prices Drop Low.

The supply of hogs was rather small for this season of the year, but owing to uncertain conditions there were plenty on the market for all. Prices were on the lowest basis they have been this year. Pigs and lights suffered to a much greater extent than medium and heavy hogs, owing to the fact that shippers were out of the market after Monday, when the buying force consisted of packers only.

While they were willing to purchase the medium and heavy hogs at reasonably good prices they were unable to use the pigs and lights, which suffered a $1.50 decline, while other hogs were off 30@50c as a rule. The best grades of hogs went at $7.25@7.50, fair kinds sold at $6.85@7.20, best pigs and lights early in the week at $7@7.25, and later at $6.25@6.75, while poor kinds, during the middle and latter part of the week, went at $5.25@6.

Until conditions are settled the market is apt to be very uncertain except for the best kinds. All pigs and lights would better be held in the country until the shippers are again able to make purchases.

There was a right fair supply of sheep on sale, and, under present conditions, it was remarkable that prices were on a higher basis, good fat lambs selling at the highest figure they have brought since last spring. Sheep scored a gain of 10@15c, while lambs were 50@75c higher, and in extra god demand at all times. None of the slaughterers got as many as they needed.

Good fat lambs early in the week were selling around $8@8.25, and later at $8.50@8.75, while plain and cull offerings went at $6.50@7.75 as a rule. Buyers did not sort the lambs very closely, because the demand was too great for parley. Western lambs, fed in Iowa, sold up around the top, and there was a good number of them offered.

Most of the mutton sheep went at $5.25, with a few around $5.85. Several times the number offered were needed to meet the demand. Choppers and canners found ready sale also, at $4@4.50 and $3@3.85. Bucks went at $4.25.

Horses and Mules.

The run in horses was on a moderate order, but was of ample size to fill all orders. Buyers were on hand from Eastern states and took fair supplies at steady prices. There was no demand for Southern animals and the market on these types was draggy. The best demand came for war animals which sold up to their usual standard. Any kind of a horse suitable for war sold well, and this was the main strength of the market.

There was no call for mules. The market was demoralized. A few buyers took a few sugar animals on the extra good qualit yorder.

Wheat futures touched the highest level reached in two months during the past week, on speculative buying induced by continued heavy export shipments to the warring nations of Europe. As the week closed there was some realizing to secure profits, but offerings were well absorbed and market sentiment for the long pull continued highly bullish.

Aside from the foreign developments the market news was slightly bearish, as the movement of wheat to domestic primary points was nearly double that of a year ago, and the domestic visible supply should show a material increase next week. In Canada, however, the movement to market continues light, and there is every indication that England has practically cleaned up the surplus wheat supply in the Dominion.

The reports on the winter wheat crop indicate a material gain in acreage as compared with last year, best estimates placing the increas at fully 10 per cent. Advices on the growing winter wheat are highly optimistic, and show that the plant is starting the winter season in almost perfect shape, as to moisture and soil conditions.

The Price Current grain reporter says: "Based on conditions that existed Oct. 28 to 30, reports from our correspondents show soil conditions for fall plowing, seeding and germination of winter wheat to be almost entirely favorable, the only complaint being of the soil too dry in western portions of South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas and too wet in a few localities in Missouri. Growth conditions of winter wheat reflect the soil conditions, being reported entirely favorable except as affected by dry weather in Western Nebraska and Kansas. The acreage sown this fall has increased over 11 per cent as compared with the acreage sown last year.

Corn futures were firm and higher throughout the week after some early selling on a perfect weather map. Liverpool cables were firm, and there were reports of further exports. Primary receipts were heavy, but the cash demand was good, and dealers expect a lighter run to market and heavy consumptive demands during the winter Oats were strong along with corn.

Crop Expert B. W. Snow's November report, said:

"November report shows that husking returns develop a yield per acre of corn eight-tenths of a bushel per acre above the yield indicated on Oct. 1. It is reported at 26.3 bushels per acre, making a total crop of 2,754,000,000 bushels. On the basis of the Government estimate of acreage the total would be 2,763,000,000 bushels. A yield above the indication is quite uniform in the leading states. Indiana being the only important State showing less than anticipated. The quality of the crop is decidedly below the average and complaint of moldy, rotten and worm-eaten corn comes from practically every part of the corn territory. While the crop matured early, frost was long delayed, and weather conditions prevented prompt drying out, so that the crop will not be ready for cribbing much earlier than usual.

"The amount of old corn remaining on farms is the least ever reported, being only 2.5 per cent of last year's crop, or 62,000,000 bushels, against 138,000,000 bushels, carried over last year. Taking consideration of crop and carry-over stocks the total corn supply available on Nov. 1 is 2,816,000,000 bushels, against 2,585,000,000 bushels last year and 3,190,000,000 in 1912. Seeding of winter wheat has been delayed occasionally because of weather conditions, but generally to avoid the Hessian fly, and seeding is still in progress in the Southwest. Current estimates show an expectation of an increased acreage of almost 10 per cent, with a breadth exceeding 39,000,000 acres. All conditions are favorable and the crop is starting with a promise generally better than usual."

A standstill in the big Cash New St. Market. Now, that the reduced dividend has occurred on Steel, the weight of argument is all on the bull side. Stocks are being depressed in the New St. Cash Market by people anxious to realize cash, but this orgie of selling has pretty well spent itself and stock offerings are disappearing like snow before the noonday sun.

Wool Sales Steady.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Ten thousand bales, principally merinos, were offered at the wool auction sales yesterday. The demand was good, and fine, well-grown staple realized firm prices. Scoured ranged from 2s ½d to 2s 1½d, but faulties and inferior grades were neglected. The small supply of cross-breds brought forward was eagerly taken by home buyers.

WHEAT CLOSES STEADY IN THE CHICAGO TRADE

Upturn Follows Some Early Selling—Corn Futures Also Are Firm.

There was enough buying in the wheat market today to hold prices a sharp fraction higher after some early selling. Corn was fairly steady. Oats were fractionally higher.

Broomhall's official Liverpool cable said; "Steady American wheat cables yesterday and firmness in Rosa Rio served to cause some support during the morning. American offers were dearer and winters up about 1½d. Spots were steady, unchanged, and there was a lessened demand for parcels, and the latest advices from Argentine is of better weather, and with continued free American receipts a waiting attitude was in evidence.

"Liverpool corn started steady with firmness in Argentine and dearer Plate offers, but later the tendency was lower with spots quiet and expected freer arrivals in the early week."

Continuance of export demand caused the wheat market later to harden somewhat. The close was steady. ¼@⅜c to ⅜c net higher.

Subsequently the corn market rallied a little with wheat. The close was steady at ⅛c to ⅛@¼c net advance.

A Banner Week!

The first week of November was a banner week for the POST-DISPATCH in the volume of local display advertising carried.

On two days, Tuesday and Friday, the POST-DISPATCH carried more of this class of advertising than all four of its competitors, the Globe-Democrat, Republic Times and Star combined, and on Wednesday and Thursday the POST-DISPATCH carried more of this class of advertising than three out of all four of its competitors, combined. Tuesday's, Wednesday's and Thursday's figures have been published. Here are Friday's:

POST-DISPATCH alone 96 Columns
All four of its competitors, the Globe, Republic, Times and Star, combined. 94 Columns

Friday was the 73rd day of this year that the POST-DISPATCH carried as much or more display advertising from St. Louis merchants than all four of the other St. Louis papers, the Globe, Republic, Times and Star, combined.

To carry more local advertising than three and all four of its competitors combined for four consecutive days of one week is an achievement that has never been accomplished by any other metropolitan newspaper.

Four persons whose names never had been mentioned in connection with the involved affairs of Beverly C. Stevens, St. Louis County real estate operator, were added to his list of alleged victims yesterday when Stevens appeared in the Circuit Court at Clayton and pleaded not guilty to four indictments returned against him by a special grand jury summoned to investigate his transactions.

The new charges are that on Sept. 16, 1913, he embezzled $100 from John Keys; that on Dec. 28, 1912, he embezzled $100 from Arthur H. Barclay; that on July 20 last he embezzled $200 from Louis and Lillian Eberling, and that on June 29, 1914, he embezzled from August Juengel a promissory note for $1700, dated June 27, 1908, and signed with the names of Abraham H. and Marie Smith.

As the evidence on which the indictments were based was given before the grand jury, it was kept secret, so that no details of the alleged defalcations were made public. The "Stevens grand jury," as it was called at Clayton, already has spent 16 days in investigating his operations, and its report is only a partial one.

Learn of Indictments.

Just before noon yesterday, Stevens' attorneys, C. M. May and Benjamin A. Wood, called at Sheriff Bode's office and inquired if any indictments had been voted against their client. Receiving an affirmative answer, Hay telephoned Stevens, who was waiting in Clayton. A few minutes later Stevens arrived with his sister, Mrs. Jennie C. Higgins of 4422 Morgan street, a widow, and his nephew, Edwin McDonald Stevens, a lawyer.

The realty dealer looked pale and thin, compared with his appearance a few weeks ago, before it became publicly known he was involved financially.

The party went first into Judge McElhinney's division, to which the indictments based on the Keys and Barclay charges had been assigned. Stevens' attorneys waived a reading of the indictments and entered a plea of not guilty.

Assistant Prosecuting Attorney E. R. Chappell urged that bail be fixed at $5000 in each case. Hay replied that as Stevens already was under $20,000 bond to answer other charges, the figure should be lower. Chappell admitted that Judge Wurdeman had suggested $3000 in each case as a fair bail. The Court accepted this opinion, and Mrs. Higgins announced herself as surety for $6000 bond.

Another $6000 Bond.

Stevens and his companions then went to Judge Wurdeman's court, to which had been sent the indictments based on the Eberling and Juengel cases. The proceedings were similar, and Mrs. Higgins became surety for another $6000 bond. Stevens did not utter a word while in the courthouse. Hearings were set in both courts for Dec. 8. Because of the hour, scarcely anyone except officials was in the courtrooms, and Stevens escaped the popular stir which attended his other appearances at Clayton.

Stevens was previously charged in warrants issued by Justice Werremeyer with grand larceny and obtaining $1600 under false pretenses from Henry Mehler of Sappington; with embezzling $1500 from Mrs. Bertha Hanpeter, 70 years old, of Kirkwood; and with embezzling $2500 from John M. Nickels of Sappington.

Mrs. Higgins also is surety on the $20,000 bonds covering these three cases. Stevens is at present answerable in bail for $32,000.

The par value of Stevens' property is appraised at $192,598 in an inventory filed Friday in Circuit Judge Taylor's court by the St. Louis County Trust Co., assignee for Stevens. This property was reported by the assignee to consist of coal mining and development company stocks valued at $98,400; notes, $38,050, and real estate, $56,148.

James A. Hereford, president of the trust company, did not think Stevens had any equity in the $56,148 real estate, as it was mortgaged beyond its value. He said creditors should not accept that figure as a basis for any probable return to them from Stevens' assets.

Schaper Bros. Give a Birthday Party for the Children.

Schaper Bros. gave a birthday party for children yesterday that crowded all of the 46,000 square feet of space that the concern occupies. The birthday party was given to the children as the twenty-second anniversary of the firm's existence in St. Louis. The entertainment was under the direction of Miss Ella Schaeffler.

A group photograph was taken after the entertainment. In this group there will be five faces encircled at random. These five faces designated by the surrounding circle will be displayed upon every floor of the Schaper Bros. store all day of Saturday, Nov. 14. The lucky children whose photographs taken in the group appear in the circle will have presented to them a pair of fine shoes free. The only condition required by the Schaper Bros. firm is that the winners of these shoe prizes shall apply in person to claim them.

HEAVY CALL FOR STATE POULTRY PREMIUM LISTS

The popularity of the Missouri State poultry show, which will be held in the St. Louis Coliseum Nov. 24-29, is attested by the large number of requests for premium lists from breeders as far East as Massachusetts and as far South as Alabama.

The Central Mississippi River states are recognized as offering exceptionally fine territory for selling standard-bred poultry of all varieties, and the outside breeders are anxious to introduce their strains of poultry so as to get a share of the money which will be spent during the coming breeding season.

The best way to show their birds, and the least expensive method of advertising is to exhibit at the leading show in this territory, so that the Missouri and Illinois poultrymen who attend will have an opportunity to see the stock they are interested in.

The large breeders also consider the advertising value which winnings at the Missouri State poultry show will give their flocks, and will be represented by the best fowls they own, as they know that the competition is going to be strong in all varieties and they are not going to take any chances on showing a second-class bird with hope of getting a blue ribbon on such an entry.

A breeder of St. Louis, who is known all over the United States, stated during the week that it would not be a disgrace to lose at the Missouri State Poultry Show this year, if the best birds in the flock are shown, as there would not be enough ribbons to go around, but that the exhibition of a few of his best birds will be an economical advertising proposition, as he will have the opportunity of showing from 15,000 to 25,000 people the best birds that he has bred during the past season. In addition, he will have a chance to compare all the birds of his variety and note the quality which is required in the winning classes. If he wins a ribbon or two he will feel very happy, but if he does not get a prize he will not regret the small entry fee for exhibiting his birds.

This show will be one of the best of schools for amateur breeders who are getting a start in poultry raising, to study the prize winners and see how they compare, in shape, color and fine points, with their own birds.

If you have not received a premium list, write at once to Fred Crosby, secretary, 3251 Gillham road, Kansas City, or to T. E. Quisenberry, superintendent, Mountain Grove, Mo., or to St. Louis Seed Co., 408 North Broadway, St. Louis, Mo.

Poultry Problems Solved.

Gray Feathers in Black Bird.

My Black Minorca rooster, now in the molt, is showing quite a number of gray feathers. He had none before. What causes this and is there a remedy? R. E.

This is not uncommon with birds of black color. It is a weakness in the color. It is most likely to appear in the tail feathers or wing flights or in the under color and less frequently on the surface of the rest of the plumage. I cannot say whether there is a remedy in this case. The only possible remedy is to pull the feathers containing the gray color. When they grow out again they may be all right, or they may not be. No one can tell. After pulling the defective feathers take good care of the bird, as to housing and feeding. Keep him by himself if possible.

Prizes on Group Displays.

How does a judge figure a premium offered at a poultry show for the largest and best display of any variety, on a scale of points?—William H. D., Illinois.

The American Poultry Association lays down some show rules, but none covering this point. Each show management makes its own rules. However, a very common rule is the following: Five points are given for each first prize, four points for second prize and so on down to fifth prize. Birds not awarded a prize are given one-half point. First pen is given 10 points, second pen eight points, and so on.

Use of Kerosene.

Will kerosene sprayed on nests and roosts harm hens? What should ducks be fed? I use two-by-four boards for roosts, flat side up. Is that the proper way?—A. L., St. Louis.

No, the kerosene will not harm them unless applied directly to their bodies. This should not be done. At this time of year I assume you refer to mature ducks. Various rations are given. A good ration is, equal parts of cornmeal, wheat bran, green food, 5 per cent beef scraps, 5 per cent coarse sand or grit. A good fattening ration is cornmeal two parts; wheat bran, one part; beef scraps, 10 per cent of this bulk; green feed, 10 per cent; grit or sand, 5 per cent. Always give ducks all the water they want. Place it near the feed. Your roosts are not in best form. They should be made so the toes can grasp the tops. It would be better to run the two-by-fours the other way, and round off the corners. That is the way I do, at least.

Non-Laying Hens.

My chickens have not laid one egg since August. They molted early in September. I feed them chop feed, bran mash, Purina chicken chowder and corn. L. C. B., Madison, Ill.

Fowls usually do not lay during the molt and often not for some time after. You are feeding well. Do not get the hens too fat. Do you feed green stuff and meat? Try meat meal or scraps two or three times a week and some green feed. Sometimes it is hard to get them started to laying. They will not lay all the time. If they lay well after Dec. 1 through the winter you should be satisfied.

Leg Weakness.

I have a cockerel, weight about four pounds. He is unable to walk. Has been that way about a month. He seems to be affected on the right side. He does not look sick. He seems to suffer pain when picked up. I have used liniment without effect. I thought at first it was leg weakness. E. D., Lebanon, Ill.

I cannot tell what is the trouble without seeing it. It is probably not leg weakness. The pain indicates it is not. Whatever it is I feel sure you cannot cure it.

Canary Ailments.

I have a male canary which I think has lice, because it is always stretching and picking itself. Can you tell me what to do?—R. C. K., St. Louis.

You can tell whether it has lice by examining it closely. Clean the cage thoroughly with soap or washing powder and water and keep it clean. Rub Persian insect powder through the feathers. Do you provide water for a bath?

Marauding Cats.

Two stray cats are taking my chickens. They get them at roosting time, and have carried off some that weighed one and one-half pounds. I have tried to poison them with rough on rats and strychnine, but they are too smart. Can you suggest a poison or some way to get rid of cats?—C. K., St. Louis.

It's a hard proposition. Eternal vigilance is the best thing I know of. It is hard, as you say, to poison them. A shotgun is a good cure, if you catch the cats around. Perhaps you could get a special permit to shoot. I suggest that you put out a chick as decoy and try to shoot the cats in this way.

Making a Living.

I am greatly interested in your poultry page. I am thinking of starting in the poultry business, and want to ask for some information. What is the best breed of hens for laying and market purposes? Could I keep 1500 hens comfortably in a house 20 by 80 feet, equipped with hot water heat for cold weather? With proper care about how many eggs a year would 1500 hens lay? How much will the feed cost? Would five acres be enough for garden and chicken yard? What is a good make incubator? Do you think one could make a living with 1500 hens, if one had to hire help occasionally?—H. C. E. E., McKee's Rocks, Pa.

The house would be much too small. Such a house would be little more than a coop. It might do for a time as a place for fattening fowls. I should want a house at least 10 times as large as the one you suggest for laying hens. I shouldn't keep 1500 hens in one compartment. I should divide them up into at least five lots. Housing 1500 hens is no small proposition. I should advise against artificial heat for adult fowls. You will have trouble with it. You don't need it if your house is built right. You don't want it cold enough to freeze the combs, neither do you want a warm house. If you get 140 to 150 eggs per hen you will be doing well. It will require good care to reach that mark. The cost of feed will depend somewhat on the variety of hens kept. At present prices about $1.50 a fowl a year is a fair estimate. Five acres should do quite well, but 10 would be better. I cannot recommend one kind of incubator rather than another. Besides I do not know what is the best incubator. There are a number of good ones. Get incubator catalogs and decide for yourself. Don't buy merely on a price basis. Much depends upon what you mean by a living. A thousand dollars a year is a living for some. For others it is not. If 1500 hens are managed successfully you should make $1500 to $3000. The business is a good business, but not for everyone. You might ask me whether you could make a living out of the banking or grocery business. I do not know. There is no best variety. On poultry plants where eggs are the main thing desired White Leghorns are usually kept. If you want an all purpose fowl, you cannot go wrong by selecting an American variety, that is, a Rock, a Red or a Wyandotte. Orpingtons are also good all-purpose fowls. The varieties named do not exhaust the all-purpose varieties.

Feed for Ducks.

Q. We have a young drake that has suddenly lost the use of his legs. He has diarrhoea and a very poor appetite. Have been feeding ordinary mixed hen food. Can I save him?—C. H., St. Louis County.

A. You probably cannot save this drake. Ducks require somewhat different system of feeding from that adapted to chickens. The mixed feed should be given mostly in a wet mash form. Be sure to supply some green feed, and be doubly sure that plenty of water is always near at hand at feeding time. It is natural for ducks to take a few mouthfuls of feed and then take a drink.

Q. I killed two spring chickens and found worms in the entrails of each, about as thick as a darning needle and about two and a half inches in length. Can I get rid of them in the rest of the fowls?—H. B., St. Louis.

A. Be sure that the premises, [illegible] ing house and yards, are clea[illegible] thorough job of cleaning. I[illegible] yard if it is not too large. [illegible] the interior of the house. [illegible] of green stuff. Give a do[illegible] salts twice a week fo[illegible] weeks. Put the salts in wat[illegible] used in preparing a wet mash. [illegible] about one teaspoonful of the salts to four or five fowls.

LARGE PROPERTY HOLDERS FAVOR CENTRAL PARKWAY

Business Men Advocate Benefit District Plan and Bond Issue to Pay for Huge Highway — With Bridge Assured, Realty Boom Is Expected.

RAILWAY TICKET OFFICES TO MERGE

Deal Now On Looks to Concentration of All Business at One Point Downtown in Line With Proposed Traffic Route.

Now that the municipal free bridge is assured and the Central Traffic Parkway virtually so the St. Louis realty market, it is believed, will develop new strength.

Some large deals, predicated on the early realization of these projects, already have been initiated, and others are expected to follow.

There is anticipated an unprecedented movement in the districts that will be affected by the completion of the bridge and the proposed parkway. More or less property in the bridge zone has already taken up by professional operators, while both sides of the proposed parkway are attracting attention.

The lack of substantial opposition to the parkway plans as demonstrated at Thursday night's hearing at the city hall was gratifying to realty agents and property owners, who are furthering the measure.

Most of the large property holders on the north side of Chestnut street and on the south side of Market street are in favor of the project. These include the Culver estate, F. N. Judson.

Wide Benefit District Favored.

A majority of the realty agents and property owners favor the forming of a wide benefit district, say to extend from Shenandoah avenue on the south to St. Louis avenue on the north, and from King's highway to Fourth street. Thus both the West End and downtown St. Louis would bear a fair proportion of the cost.

As a most equitable way, Assessor Frank W. Schramm advocates a bond issue, providing for payment by the entire city, and extending over a period of 25 years. The future generation thus, he says, would help pay the cost, which is estimated at $8,000,000, and a part of which the city will have to pay at all events.

Several projects, which evidently have been excited by the parkway plan, have developed.

Plans for a $200,000 studio building, facing on the parkway, were announced at an annual meeting of the St. Louis Art League Thursday night. The building is to accommodate artists, sculptors and musical composers, and will be arranged to permit exhibitions of musical, dramatic and art talent of members of the league.

As a location for clubs, hotels, theaters and other quasi-public buildings, sites overlooking the parkway doubtless will be in demand.

Move to Concentrate Ticket Offices.

There are pending three deals, which contemplate concentrating the railway ticket offices of St. Louis.

The latest deal looks to quarters on the ground floor of the Wainwright, the Title Guaranty Trust and the Leathe buildings, at Chestnut and Seventh streets, and on the ground floor of the Fullerton Building, at the southeast corner of Pine and Seventh streets.

This is being engineered by James E. Fogg and Robert H. Cornell.

As this move will be in line with the proposed central parkway, it is not regarded unfavorably.

The other sites under consideration for the ticket offices are the northwest and the northeast corner, respectively, of Tenth and Eleventh and Locust streets, the southeast corner of Broadway and Locust street, and both sides of Olive street between Tenth and Twelfth streets.

The Mercantile Trust Co., represented by Harry A. Cragan, who is promoting the Tenth, Eleventh and Locust streets deal, has 20 of the 21 railroads signed for this location.

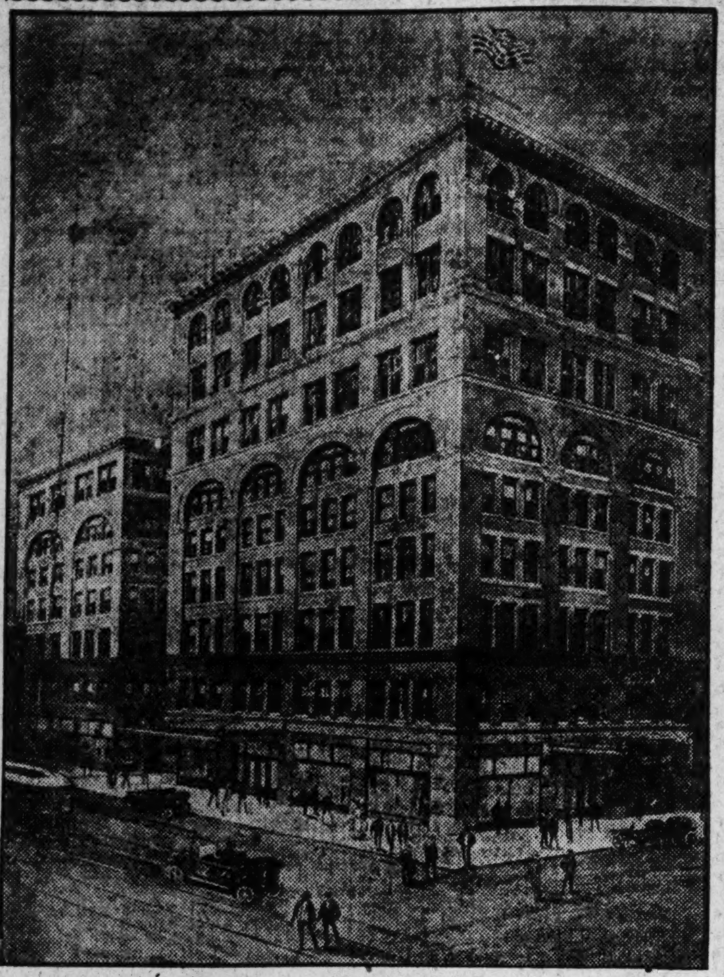
Carpet Company's New Home, With Two Additional Stories



The Trorlicht-Dunker Carpet Co. has acquired lease of the massive commercial building at the southeast corner of Twelfth and Locust streets for a term of 20 years.

While the annual rental to be paid has not been disclosed, it is understood to be $20,000.

The building, which is seven stories high, will be increased in height to nine stories and altered to conform with the demands of the lessee at a cost of $125,000, according to the provisions of the lease.

The Martin-Breitt Real Estate Co. effected the lease, representing both the carpet company and the Culver Bros. Realty Co., the owners of the building.

Will Add Prestige to District.

The carpet company, whose removal will be an irreparable loss to Fourth, will lend prestige to Twelfth street as a retail and wholesale center.

The company, which is one of the most representative houses in St. Louis, was founded in 1863. Its first home was on Fourth street, between Franklin and Washington avenue, and its second at Fourth street and Lucas avenue. As its business increased, the house removed to larger quarters.

In 1879 the company staked its claims at 508 North Fourth street and a few years later at the southeast corner of Fourth street and Washington, its present location.

Five Officers in Company.

The officers of the company are C. H. Duncker, H. A. Trorlicht, H. H. Wilson, F. C. Biel and A. M. Buschmann.

About June 1, 1915, the company will remove to the Twelfth street building, the conversion of which will be on a handsome scale. New and modern fixtures will be installed throughout and nothing will be omitted that will add to the convenience and comfort of patrons.

Twelfth street will be the outlet for the traffic of the proposed central traffic parkway and this was a consideration in the selection of the new big location.

FREE BRIDGE EXPECTED TO MAKE EAST ST. LOUIS THRIVE

Merchants Elated Over Result of Bond Issue Vote and Industrial League Secretary Says Prosperity Will Follow Completion of Eastern Approach.

East St. Louis merchants and bankers are elated over the result of the free bridge election in St. Louis. All are convinced that the completion of the east approach will bring unprecedented prosperity to East St. Louis.

R. W. Sikking, secretary of the East St. Louis Industrial League, an organization devoted to the industrial development of the city, in discussing the matter, said that the passage of the bond issue to complete the bridge structure made possible the solution of many East St. Louis problems, which have somewhat retarded the progress of the city for the last few years.

"The completion of the free bridge," said Sikking, "will open the way for the solution of many East St. Louis industrial and railroad difficulties and will revert tremendously to our benefit. For instance, the South End, which has been regarded as a failure, will now enjoy a great boom. That section is composed of many acres of land, very well suited for factory purposes, but was formerly subject to overflow and was therefore considered undesirable. That section is now drained by a $1,000,000 outlet sewer and protected against high water by our $6,500,000 levee.

South End Will Be Built Up.

"The completion of the municipal bridge approach and the consequent improvement of the terminal facilities in its vicinity will cause the South End to build up very rapidly. I have in mind now a number of deals which will be closed shortly as a result of the passage of the bridge bonds.

"We may reasonably assume that most of the passenger trains, which now pass through the most undesirable part of East St. Louis will in the future pass through the very best part of East St. Louis to the municipal bridge. This means that the traveling public will be apprised of the fact that East St. Louis has some beautiful residence districts in addition to her factory districts. Practically all of the Eastern trains will come through East St. Louis in the future and we may look forward to the erection of a new passenger station in the eastern part of our city of a standard much higher than that of our rather unsightly relay depot.

Will Add to Population.

"The Free Bridge will add materially to the population of East St. Louis. The residence district of East St. Louis is much closer to the business district of St. Louis than the residence district of St. Louis. Hundreds of business men have offices in the business district of St. Louis and employes of business houses in that district will now reside in the residence sections of East St. Louis and it may be reasonably prophesied that the Free Bridge will add ultiamtely at least 50,000 people to the population of East St. Louis.

"Until recently East St. Louis was almost exclusively a manufacturing city, but we have established a park system at a cost of $500,000 comprising 1500 acres. We are now building a seven-mile public boulevard and our residence sections are not surpassed for beauty even in St. Louis. East St. Louis is growing with St. Louis. This city is substantially a part of St. Louis and whatever benefits St. Louis will benefit us.

"East St. Louis is the logical industrial section of the St. Louis district and every factory which locates here is a benefit to St. Louis. The Free Bridge will weld the two cities more closely together and there is no question in my mind about the enormous benefits which will result both to St. Louis and East St. Louis from the completion of the Municipal Bridge."

LEAHY CONTINUES SALES AT WEST WALNUT MANOR

Real Estate Dealer Offers Home Sites on Terms to Close Out Subdivision.

David P. Leahy announced yesterday that the sale of houses at West Walnut Manor would be continued until all the lots in the subdivision had been sold. The price of each house is $880, the terms of sale being $25 cash and $9.27 a month.

The David P. Leahy House and Home Co. has sold from the plans about 75 houses on these terms and for cash. A liberal discount, which is not infrequently taken advantage of, is allowed on all cash transactions.

The houses are being built and sold at cost, with the view to the early closing out of the subdivision.

In addition to about twenty houses, 18 lots were sold to persons who have their own building plans and whose operations vie with those of Leahy.

West Walnut Manor, which is located at Hamilton and Florissant avenues, just outside the city limits, is not subject to city taxation.

Leases Express Company Building.

The A. Eckhardt Livery and Boarding Co. has leased the United States Express Co.'s building at 112-14-16 South Eleventh street, 89x156 feet, to A. Eckhardt Co. for a term of five years, at an annual rental of $2400. The A. Eckhardt Co. has contracts with the Government for the delivery of parcel post articles and the premises will be used for storage and warehouse purposes. The Martin-Breitt Real Estate Co. negotiated the lease and represented both parties.

BRIGHT FUTURE PREDICTED FOR SOUTHAMPTON

R. C. Buchanan Tells of Popular Subdivision's Progress Under Trying Conditions.

NEW BUILDINGS PLANNED

Individuality of Homes and Improvements Projected Forecast Continued Growth.

Upon being asked for a statement as to the outlook on subdivision matters, R. C. Buchanan of the Mercantile Trust Co., who is in charge of the Southampton Realty Co.'s holdings in South St. Louis, said:

"Southampton this year has improved wonderfully under trying conditions. The early part of the season was obscured to some extent by threatenings of the Mexican war cloud. People are largely creatures of conditions. In other words, any talk contrary to smooth sailing in business and national affairs immediately causes them to become very cautious, and in that way many strong contributors to national prosperity or local welfare retard developments that would naturally take place.

"During the midsummer season, when subdivision sales ought to be going full blast, the Tower Grove grade crossing was a source of detriment. This will soon be eliminated, as the viaduct is rapidly nearing the point where the part for carrying street cars will be completed and the traffic lifted free of obstruction.

"In August the war in Europe caused everybody to become more or less dubious about what would be the outcome in the financial world. However, through the shrewd management of men interested in our national affairs, this danger has been minimized to a degree which one three months ago thought impossible.

Sees Benefits for U. S. in War.

"In a large measure the markets of the world are being opened up to the purchases of our products and money is beginning to flow into this country again. Discount rates have been practically reduced to normal. The elections are over and confidence has been expressed in our new leaders. The free bridge bond issue has carried overwhelmingly and that will turn thousands of dollars for labor and otherwise advance the financial interest of the city. The great Mill Creek sewer is in course of construction, which will contribute many thousands of dollars to the wage eagners, as the work progresses. Other civic features are being considered, and, if carried out, will enhance real estate values in many directions in the city of St. Louis. The opening of the regional banks this month bids fair to further increase our financial ability to help the present situation.

"While the war in Europe is greatly to be regretted, there will grow out of it a lasting benefit to the United States. This is a self-supporting country. The United States, abbreviated, spells "US." No matter how the storms come elsewhere, as long as we maintain our own state of tranquility, there is work among ourselves sufficient to maintain the operations of the commerce of the country, and otherwise advance our social and civic conditions.

Homes Reflect Individuality.

"The remarkable feature about Southampton is its individuality. In every case the homes that are being put up there are for persons who become residents of the place. They are neat, semi-bungalow in character, with modern conveniences. The lots are large and give premises of each home a liberty that is found in few subdivisions of this character. Plans are out for several store buildings. W. T. Smith has under construction at the corner of Murdock and Macklin avenue two splendid store buildings, one of which will be occupied by a druggist. The second floor of the building will be a hall, to be used by the Presbyterian Mission as a place of worship.

"Paul Sander, who was formerly at Michigan and Itaska streets, has purchased 50 feet on the corner of Brannon and Devonshire streets and will erect a building for store and residence purposes.

"The betterments in street car service and the improvement of King's highway will enhance the value of ground in this district. The prospect for Southampton, to say the least, is good and it is conclusively establishing the oft'-repeated statement that in times of storm and stress, the man who owns his home is safer, his family happier and in every way he is better fitted to battle against the misfortunes that beset us all in the journey of life."

BRIDGE BONDS PASSAGE CAUSES $75,000 DEAL

Big Indiana Box Factory to Build Main Plant in East St. Louis.

Canavan and Tarlton report the sale of 265 feet at Eleventh and Converse streets, on the Terminal track, to be used for industrial purposes. The property was purchased by E. E. Ames, president of the Pioneer Box Co. of Crawfordsville, Ind., after negotiations lasting about three months.

The company will establish its main plant in East St. Louis and will employ about 100 men. Two brick buildings, one 100x150 feet, and the other 120x90 feet, will be erected at once. The total cost of the buildings, the property and the equipment is estimated at $75,000. The company has obtained options on the adjoining property, with the view of expanding the plant in the near future.

Although negotiations have been under way for some time, it is believed that the passage of the bridge bonds at St. Louis, which will result in the wagon approach being in the vicinity of this property, caused the deal to be closed Saturday.

"The Mother of the Dead"

First of Notable Sculptures Inspired by the Great War

THIS striking piece, by C. S. Pietro, won great praise in a New York exhibition of sculptors and artists for the benefit of sufferers in the European war. The story is told with dignity and pathos. A grief-stricken old peasant woman, her frightened grandchild at her knee, staring with eyes which do not understand, is seated in an attitude of profound despair. The knotted hand tells her station in life, and the bowed head, the drooping shoulders and sunken chest and, more than all else, the lines of the face proclaim a sorrow too deep for tears. The eyes burn their mute appeal into the heart of the beholder. They seem to gaze into the years that have gone; they see no future, but behold only the vision of the son torn and dead in battle.

GERMAN AND ITALIAN CHANTS OF HATRED

Ernest Lissauer in 'Jugend"

Rendered Into English by Barbara Henderson.

FRENCH and Russian, they matter not,
A blow for a blow, and a shot for a shot;
We love them not, we hate them not,
We hold the Weichsel and Vosges gate.
We have but one and only hate.
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone.

He is known to you all, he is known to you all,
He crouches behind the dark gray flood,
Full of envy, of rage, of craft, of gall,
Cut off by waves that are thicker than blood.
Come let us stand at the Judgment place,
An oath to swear to, face to face,
An oath of bronze no wind can shake,
An oath for our sons and their sons to take.
Come, hear the word, repeat the word,
Throughout the Fatherland make it heard.
We will never forego our hate,
We have all but a single hate.
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone—
England!
In the Captain's mess, in the banquet hall,
Sat feasting the officers, one and all,
Like a saber blow, like the swing of a sail,
One seized his glass held high to hail;
Sharp-snapped like the stroke of a rudder's play,
Spoke three words only: "To the Day!"
Take you the folk of the earth in pay,
With bars of gold your ramparts lay,
Bedeck the ocean with bow on bow,
Ye reckon well, but not well enough now.
French and Russian, they matter not
A blow for a blow, a shot for a shot
You will hate with a lasting hate,
We will never forego our hate,
Hate by water and hate by land,
Hate of the head and hate of the hand,
Hate of the hammer and hate of the crown,
Hate of seventy millions, choking down,
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone—
England!

Gabriel d'Annunzio's Poem, "Arise Italia"

Translated by Walter Littlefield.

THY day is dawning! Thy golden day is here!
Thy sister stands erect in the blazing sun.
She is clad in the purple robe of war.
Twofold wings gird her naked feet.
Bathed in her burning tears,
Bathed in her bitter blood,
Flower sublime of discord,
Never with beauty so great
Even in times of her kingdom.
Of all her dripping sores
She has made a wondrous dew,
With the multitude of her sins
She revives her morning star!

Like the double-edged ax of war
Gleams her energy to win
In the transparent depths of her eyes,
Like the skylark she's ready to sing
On the fathomless summits of death.
Reseated, with tireless hands,
A new world fabric she'll weave,
With barbarian alone against her,
Who shall be with her, if not thou?

The exalted, the elected are we,
And we'll crush the hideous tribe.
We will wage war facing the light.
We will smile when we have to die,
For, 'tis the sacred hour, O Latins,
Of the reaping and the fighting.

Women, take scythes and reap!
Prepare new bread for new hunger!
Your men as compact as ears of corn
Will strike hard, rank against rank,
Like stiff wheat under the Eastern wind.
O Victory, unrelenting reaper,
I feel upon my forehead, waiting,
The freshness of the dawn.
As priest of Mars to Lanuvium children,
I say: "Ye have heard that which pleaseth the god.
Hasten your hour, obey, and go forth.
Ye are the seed of a new world,
And auroras most wondrous are yet to be born."

(These are but the last stanzas of an impassioned arraignment of Austria, as Italy's hereditary foe, and of appeal to Italy to arise and seek her revenge.)

A MILLION GERMAN BABIES

BY GERALD STANLEY LEE

Author of "Crowds," "The Inspired Millionaires," etc.

A MILLION new children every year appear in Germany.

They look up in the faces of their fathers and mothers and smile and say: "What are you going to do with us?"

The fathers and mothers in the houses and factories and streets and in the shops and fields go about wondering. They do not know.

Nearly every day the million new babies smile and look up in the faces of their fathers and mothers and say it again.

In another short year a million more look up and smile and say—they say it all through Germany to the fathers and to the mothers—"What are you going to do with us?"

To an American it seems simple enough. Ten million uncles and aunts and nephews on farms and in stores and in factories all the way from Ellis Island to Seattle write letters and say it's fine over here, and send money orders.

If you are a German father or mother and find yourself looking into the inquiring face of say the nine hundred and sixty-eight thousand three hundred and sixty-seventh surplus German baby—if you find yourself looking into the face of No. 968,367 Extra, which the German Government does not know where to put or really see any use for—why should you worry so long as there is a great roomy country like the United States looking out for him and waiting for him—why should anyone—even his own father and mother, worry about No. 968,367?

Let him laugh and cry and gurgle and sleep. There is room somewhere for him and if not, he has got it in him (anybody can see it as he laughs and kicks) he will make room for himself. He began by making room in one house well enough and he will keep it up on the planet.

This is the way an American would put it to the German father and mother.

Anyway I would.

But this morning as I sat in the train and watched Ohio and Indiana slip past the window, and looked at the great barns and yellow harvests of the farmers, and thought of the fields of battle of the Germans and the French, I found myself thinking of the Germans in a new way.

I had been spending a couple of days with a man I had known merely as the head of a great business which has dotted Russia, China, France and Germany and the fields of the world with its machines. I had never seen him with his family about him before.

The little four-year-old child who ran in and climbed up on him, spoke to him in German. As his wife was an American and as he certainly was an American, and had always had a tremendous interest in American political parties, personalities and programs, and had taken no small share in the most utterly and typically American movement in politics that this country has ever known, and as I had looked upon him as one of the masters and interpreters of all that is best in our American life, I was puzzled by seeing him talking with the child in his arms as if they had just moved over from Germany a year ago.

I then remembered that the main ideas he had stood for and had made his career out of, were ideas he had seized upon and seen the American bearings of while in a German University.

It came out a little later that he had quarreled with his parents and his teachers in boyhood and had run away from an American school, to Germany. As the German boy or the French boy runs away to a new country, he had run away to an old one. This was the secret of his power. His children are being taught German and are speaking it in the family while growing up, because they will have English anyway and he wants his children to get as much out of German civilization for use in America as he had got out of it for use in America. He wants the German virtues wrought in—while they are growing up—with the American virtues. Of course if there is one thing in all the world that would be becoming to our American virtues it would be to have a few German ones mixed in with them. Even if the German virtues are bad for the Germans, they are good for us.

The best way to do in getting German virtue is to get it where it is made. It cannot be taught or read. It must be breathed. One gets it best by being surrounded with thousands of people who have it and who do not even know they have it.

So as I came away from my friend's house I kept thinking, I saw how he had made a career out of his German habits of mind, out of the thoroughness and honesty of his thoughts, out of his spiritual persistence and above all out of that sense of soundness and well being which he conveyed to everything he did and to every man he met. Then suddenly without anything being said about it, it came over me how a German father might feel with a new baby Germany had no room for, looking him in the eye and saying "What are you going to do with me?"

When one sees the fathers and mothers of a great people standing on the edge of a nation watching a million children a year being pushed off into the sea or flooded away to be breathed into by strange civilizations, to have their lives seized by other ideals and by other enthusiasms, one suspects one sees what the Germans are really fighting for.

They are fighting for the right to keep on being Germans. President Wilson says they must be Americans if they come over here. Of course he is right, but everybody says it. Nobody will give anybody room to be a German, or let a German buy a little room for being a German.

This is the point. And the war came because we have been talking about peace instead of attending to it. Here was something the nations between them could do. They built a beautiful sentimental palace to peace instead.

The Germans are making a stand for the habits of their minds. They don't want to be isolated and set one at a time into a totally different human climate. All the peoples have their little ways. Looking into your boy's face before he goes away and thinking he will be coming home to you a sleek Frenchman, or a respectable Englishman, or a glig American is not a happy experience.

I am not saying that this point of view justifies the war.

How would we Americans like it ourselves?

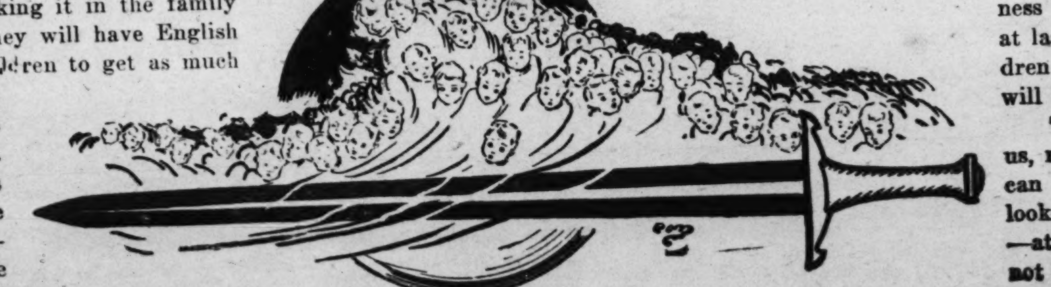
The Germans have taken the wrong way to tell us about their million babies a year, but the idea they are trying to get into us—some of them, is all right.

The world has got to provide for those million babies. They are ours as well as Germany's. And we are going to help Germany to arrange for some room on the earth—her own room—on which to do it, when our attention is really got to it.

She is making a desperately clumsy business of getting our attention to her million babies just now; but for my part, any nation that knows enough or is buoyant enough to have a million more babies a year than the older, tireder, or (may I say) more spinsterish and maiden-aunt nations want has got to be listened to.

When one thinks of it a million surplus babies in a nation are about as neat a compliment to this planet and about as noble an appeal to the chivalry of the world as anybody could hope for from any nation.

Any way there is something about it—about that million extra babies which, if the Germans will ever stop fighting us long enough to let us think, will yet reach all people.



After the roar and darkness the Kings and Ministers at last will let the little children speak and the nations will be gentle in their hearts.

There is not a nation of us, nor a man of us all, who can take one good, square look—even in a shop window—at a pair of baby-shoes, and not think fair and straight.

THAT the planet Mars is covered with a system of canals—first announced by Schiaparelli in 1877 and confirmed by Pickering and Lowell since—is disputed by many astronomers, who say flatly that they cannot see any such markings on the surface of our sister planet.

It is on the existence of these canals that rests the theory that Mars is inhabited by intelligent beings, for these canals, as described by the astronomers who have seen them, are too mathematically straight to be due to any but artificial causes. E. C. Slipher of the Lowell Observatory staff, who has been studying Mars for several years has collected a large series of photographs and drawings by many observers at many different times and in many widely separated places, all of them showing the canals in an unmistakable way. Upon these he bases an article in the Scientific American, in which he argues that they are absolute proof of the existence of these canals.

Jan. 20, 1914. By E. C. Slipher with 24-inch refractor at Flagstaff, Arizona.

It must be understood that it is not the actual canals on Mars that show in the photographs. Mr. Slipher explains this as follows:

"Older by cosmic eons than the earth, and further on in planetary evolution and development, Mars has but a meager supply remaing of either air or water. Therefore it is supposed by Lowell that this network of canals and oases comprises an artificial system of irrigation intelligently constructed to utilize and distribute the water from the melting snows over the desert planet. The visible markings, of course, are not the waterways themselves, but blue-green strips of vegetation sprung from this irrigation. Two significant facts found by the observations here suggest, more than any other perhaps, their artificiality, and otherwise substantiate his theory: First, the marked geometric directness with which the canals in general connect with the oases and isolated points, which makes them appear quite similar to a distant view of a system of railways. Second, the characteristic way in which they seem to push out from, and develop with, the melting of the snow caps."

As proof that these canals are not imaginary Mr. Slipher calls attention to the agreement of the drawings and photographs made by Schiapparelli, Lowell, Fournier and himself at Flagstaff, Ariz.; Alianza, Chile; Milan, Italy, and Setif, Algeria. Those who have seen and photographed the canals are those who sought out the best atmospheric conditions for their observations; those who have failed to find them and who wish to discredit the existence of the canals will not seek the conditions possible for their visibility. At Lowell Observatory they have been seen with both the 24-inch refractor and the 40-inch refractor, and with apertures anywhere between six and forty inches. Mr. Slipher saw them through the clear desert air of the Tarapaca in Chili with a three-and one-half inch telescope.

The photographs bring Mars to a size from four to six times greater in surface than the moon is to the naked eye. Though atmospheric disturbance makes it impossible to photograph the canals as clearly as they can be seen with the naked eye, many of them have been recorded by the camera hundreds of times and can be recognized as easily as the mountains and valleys of the moon. In all, about [illegible] canals and oases have been observed at Flagstaff, Ariz., in the complex network which covers the planet's surface.

How Wireless Messages Are Sent to Earth by Aeronauts

IT is almost impossible in practice to send a wireless message to a man in an airship. Not that the wireless waves fail to reach him, but that the noise of the engine is so terrific that it makes the faint signals in the telephone receivers inaudible.

It is, however, comparatively easy for an aviator to send wireless messages to the earth. Marcus D. Manton, in an article in Aircraft, describes the apparatus, which is different from that used on land and sea, because there is no possibility of getting a ground connection.

"The apparatus required to make this wireless transmission possible," says Mr. Manton, "is as follows:

"An alternator and transformer, the alternator being driven by the engine used for propelling the machine, or by means of an auxiliary engine or motor of some description, or in place of this alternator and transformer an induction coil may be used, the electric current being supplied to it from a battery of accumulators.

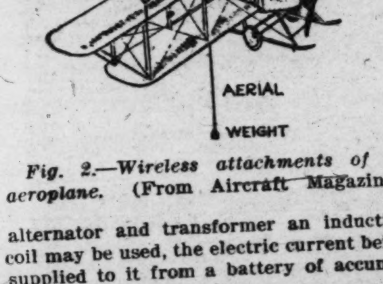

Fig. 2.—Wireless attachments of an aeroplane. (From Aircraft Magazine.)

"One of the two above-mentioned devices is necessary to supply the transmitting aerial or antennae with energy, and in order to produce the necessary oscillations in the aerial a spark gap must also be provided.

"A key is also necessary to enable the operator to make and break the electric circuit at will, in order to produce dots and dashes for transmitting a message in the Morse or other prearranged code."

To surmount the difficulty of having no ground connection a device called a counterpoise is used. "It consists of two distinct aerials, apart from one another and each highly insulated. The aerials on airships usually consist of a single copper cable about sixty to one hundred yards long, one end of which is connected to the instruments; to the free end a weight is attached and then lowered over the side of the machine so that it hangs vertically below the machine when in flight. A winch is provided so that the aerial may be quickly wound up or down.

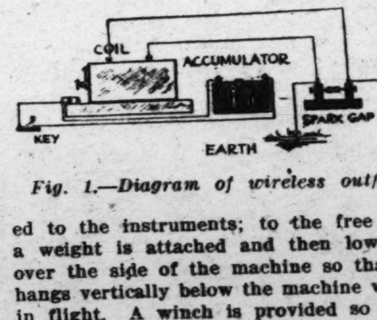

Fig. 1.—Diagram of wireless outfit.

"In the event of the machine having to make a forced landing and giving no time to wind up the aerial, the wire cable is severed by means of an aerial cutter, which is fitted to the side of the winch, and the wire falls clear of the machine, so that the aeroplane lands in the ordinary way without any danger of the aerial catching in trees or being tangled up by the propeller.

"The counterpoise used in place of the ground connection consists of a system of wires running from the planes to the tail of an aeroplane or from end to end of the car of a dirigible. Fig. 2 shows how a counterpoise and aerial are fitted to an aeroplane. Such machines take two men—pilot and operator."

Optophone Enables the Blind to Read Letterpress

Any instrument which translates light into sound may be called an optophone, and this is the name given to this one. For such translation an intermediate link is necessary. This must be either heat or electric current, and, as a current of only a few thousandths of a microampere is audible in the best modern telephones, this is the link selected.

In an article in Nature Mr. Fournier d'Albe describes his optophone by saying:

"An optical system throws the image of a glowing Nernst filament upon the printed paper, laid face downward on a suitable perforated disk. This image is broken up into a series of seven or eight luminous dots, flashing with different musical frequencies by means of a rotating siren disc placed immediately in front of the Nernst filament.

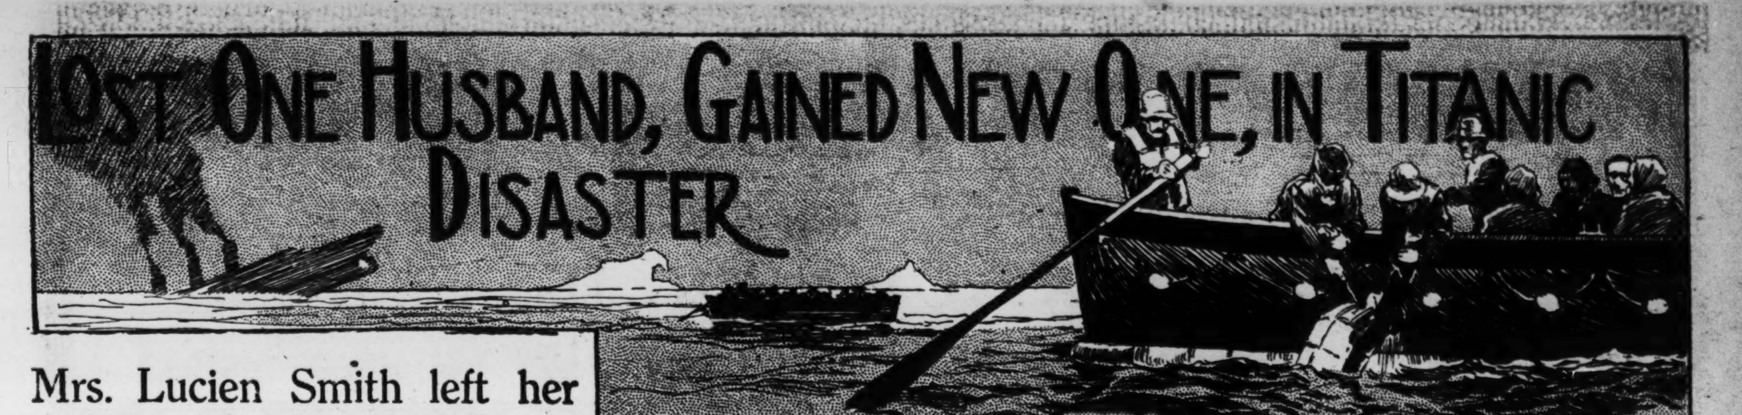
"Some light-sensitive preparation, preferably of selenium, is placed close to the type so as to receive whatever light is diffusely reflected by it. The size of the image is made to fit the size of type to be read, and a sensitive telephone is put in series with the selenium and a battery, or with one of S. G. Brown's telephone relays.

"It has been found possible to obtain a readable sound from type of the ordinary newspaper size. The straight black stem of a letter produces silence, and a curved letter, such as S, produces in its passage a set of gradually changing notes which are characteristic of the letter, and cannot be mistaken even after only a few minutes' practice. To learn the entire alphabet in this way should be a matter of a few weeks or months, but the amount of practice required will vary very greatly from one person to another, as only a musical ear can readily detect the emission of certain notes from a given chord. Given an adequate alignment and line-changing mechanism, there is no reason why, with sufficient practice ear reading should not be almost as rapid as the ordinary reading at sight.

"The choice of type is, of course, u limited. There is no arbitrary element in the determination of the sounds required to represent the various letters, as each type will automatically produce its own characteristic sounds. With practice a blind person should be able to construct a visual image of any new letterpress type at first hearing."

SUGAR as a surgical antiseptic has been recommended by a German surgeon. It is said that it is not injurious to the blood, and is a better preventative of putrefaction than ordinary medical antiseptics.



LOST ONE HUSBAND, GAINED NEW ONE, IN TITANIC DISASTER

Mrs. Lucien Smith left her mate of two months on sinking ship and wed secretly last August an exhausted swimmer picked up by the boat in which she was saved

THE sinking of the Titanic, most tragic of maritime catastrophes, was the bitter field from which the flower of romance has been plucked by two of the survivors, Mrs. Eloise Hughes Smith of Huntington, W. Va., and Robert W. Daniel, president of the Robert W. Daniel banking house of Philadelphia and New York. Their secret marriage in New York on Aug. 18 has just been disclosed to the great wonder of all the circle in which they move.

Miss Eloise Hughes, as she then was, the daughter of Congressman James A. Hughes of West Virginia, made her debut in Washington society at a brilliant affair at the Hotel Willard, just two months before the Titanic disaster. A few days later she was married to Lucien Smith of New York. They went to the Continent for their honeymoon and sailed for home on the Titanic, being attracted, like so many other unfortunates, by the opportunity to make the maiden voyage of the world's finest ocean liner.

Mrs. Lucien Smith, from a photograph taken shortly after the Titanic disaster.

On the morning of April 14, 1912, as everyone remembers, the huge ship, racing homewards, crashed into a floating mountain of ice and was ripped asunder as a can opener rips a tin. Smith wrapped his bride of two months in furs and led her on deck. There, like other heroic husbands who could find no other means of persuading their wives to leave them to their fate, he induced her to take a place in a lifeboat by telling a noble prevarication. There was no danger, he assured her; the women were being put into the boats as a precaution and to observe the rules of the sea. It was preposterous, he declared, to think that such a ship as the Titanic could sink, and in a little while he and his wife would again be together in safety on the big liner.

So Mrs. Smith, believing that her husband was in little danger, kissed him, not knowing it was for the last time, and took her place in one of the boats. With her was another young bride, likewise about to become a widow, Mrs. John Jacob Astor. As the boat descended to the water, the two women could see their husbands leaning over the rail, high above them, and waving encouragement.

The boat bobbed about on the sea and gradually drew away from the mortally stricken giant, on the deck of which the faces of Smith and Astor became pale specks and finally indistinguishable. Although the women saw the Titanic was perceptibly settling, they were still confident that all would be well. Had not the Titanic been proclaimed an unsinkable ship?

Then came the terrible moment when the bows of the liner plunged beneath the surface and flung her stern and propellers into the air, to hang there for several minutes before she at last slid down the long reaches of water to her everlasting grave. From the sea uprose a frightful chorus of shrieks and cries from a thousand wretches in their death agony.

To both the brides in the lifeboat this tragic peal of anguish was the signal of their widowhood, and also that their children, yet unborn, had become fatherless. But they would not yet give up all to despair, largely because of an incident which, had one of the young women known it, was the dawning of a new life for her just at the moment when her old life was setting in the night of disaster.

Against their boat came drifting a swimmer, spent with exhaustion and half frozen in the icy waters. So foredone was he with his struggles that he had almost given up the fight for life. So benumbed that he could scarcely move and unable to aid himself, he was dragged over the gunwale into the boat, and sank, half dead, upon the flooring. It was Robert W. Daniel. With such a rescue occurring before her eyes, Mrs. Smith could not but hope that her husband might have been similarly saved.

Dawn brought the welcome sight of the rescue ship Carpathia, but also, when they had been taken aboard, brought to the two brides the certainty that their husbands were among the lost. Neither of them had been picked up by any of the boats. Astor's body was afterwards found, floating upright in a life preserver. That of Lucien Smith was never recovered. Some months afterwards sons were born to both widows. Mrs. Smith's son was named Lucien Smith II, in memory of his heroic father, who had given his life that women and children might be saved.

Daniel had been to London on business and was returning home on the Titanic. He waited until the gunwale of the liner was but six feet above the water and then sprang into the sea. He had swum several hundred feet when, the last ounce of his strength exhausted, he drifted into the boat which bore for him not only life but love.

Recovering from his chill swim, Daniel, on the Carpathia, introduced himself to Mrs. Smith, in whose boat he had been rescued, and attempted to console her in her grief. They who had been through so terrible an adventure together could not but become friends. And after they reached New York and had gone to their homes, the acquaintance was not dropped. They were bound together as companions in the ocean's greatest calamity.

A year passed, and the anniversary of the disaster arrived. It was proposed that on that day flowers should be strewn upon the sea at the point where Titanic went down. Mrs. Smith was one of the many widows who disapproved of this memorial rite, declaring that no good could come of reviving the memories of that awful night. It would be better, she said, to use the money to aid the poor widows and orphans of the Titanic.

Robert W. Daniel, who was rescued from the Titanic with Mrs. Smith and married her secretly last August.

Still another year passed, and it was becoming evident that the wealthy young banker was beginning to feel a deeper sentiment for the attractive Titanic widow than that sympathy which came from having passed together close under the hand of death. In due time he proposed and was accepted. Only intimate friends of the couple were informed of the wedding, which remained a secret from the public for more than two months.

On the day after the wedding Daniel was compelled to sail for London on urgent business. Owing to the war he considered that it would be difficult to care for his bride abroad, and left her in this country. It was his intention to return within three weeks, but he did not succeed in getting away from England for two months.

It was his hurried departure, he said, which prevented a formal announcement of the marriage. The announcement was made immediately after his return.

They will make their home in Philadelphia, where Mr. Daniel's business interests are chiefly.

Woman's Power Is in Her Clothes

Author of "Daddy Longlegs" Believes in Dressing Up Her Sisters and Giving Them Silk Stockings for the Enhancement of Their Morale.

"YOU can do anything in this world if you only have the right clothes,"—these daring feminist sentiments come from the philosophical pages of "Daddy Long-Legs," Jean Webster's "best seller," which has exhausted a dozen, more or less, printings and which promises as a play to go over into a second season, if its beginnings in New York are any indication.

Miss Webster does believe it, most absolutely, that, given the right clothes, a woman can do anything! Moreover, she is more than half-way convinced that life's only true orphans are those girl creatures who are denied their fundamental yearnings for soft chiffons, and—say—silk stockings!

"It is one of my favorite games," she says "to dress up girls that have lovely features and all the youth and slimness that would make of them pictures if they were only properly garbed. I see them coming out of shops in the evening, on street cars, tired and worn, after the day's work, and I feel what fun it would be to whisk this little scrap of a creature up and put her into soft and lovely garments, and give her a beautiful time for the rest of her life! I don't know why, but all fun that touches a girl seems to start in buying her new and wonderful clothes."

Miss Webster doesn't think that, important as clothes are to a woman, she dresses either for other women or for men.

"She dresses for herself, first of all," she said. "In Vassar, where there are twenty men to a thousand girls, the girls dress beautifully. At the dances they all wear evening gowns and take as much trouble to be pretty as if there were a beau for every girl instead of only girls to see them. They dress for the pleasure clothes give them! Every normal woman feels a satisfaction in her clothes if they are prety and becoming."

Jean Webster herself suggests her "Patty" of beloved memory. Added to all that young woman's charm and sense of humor, she has a streak of shyness in her manner that is part of the appeal of her later "Judy." In speaking of the success of the play she discounted anything she might have done for its success. She doesn't even find anything exciting or unsual in the fact that 'Daddy Long-Legs' has been playing to capacity since the first week it opened.

"There was one passage the London Punch quoted with great enjoyment from my book," she laughed, her finger to her forehead; "I can't ever remember the lines myself." She hunted for a copy of the book, and marked the page. The passage indicated was this:

"One can't help thinking, Daddy, what a colorless life a man is forced to lead when one reflects that chiffon and Venetian point and hand embroidery and Irish crochet are to him mere empty words. Whereas—a woman, whether she is interested in babies, or microbes, or husbands, or poetry, or servants, or parallelograms, or Plato or bridge—is fundamentally and always interested in clothes."

Now Miss Webster has had her novels to run as serials in the leading American fashion journals, and it seemed pertinent to ask her, just here, if she feels so warmly about clothes what her temperature is about American fashions.

She colored up charmingly and confessed she didn't know, and said:

"I can't imagine any joy in life greater than sitting down in front of a mirror and buying any hat you choose without having first to consider the price!"

NOVEL THINGS WORTH KNOWING

Adenoid Growths the Cause of Enlarged Neck Glands

SEVENTY-FIVE per cent of the swollen neck glands, so common among children, can be cured without operation, and so without leaving that hideous scar which remains throughout life, according to Dr. Nathan P. Stauffer of Blockley Hospital, Philadelphia.

These swollen glands are the result of neglect of adenoid growths, enlarged tonsils and bad teeth. They are caused by infection. The glands in the neck are part of the lymphatic system that extends throughout the body, furnishing the lymph that bathes every organ, every cell. In the words of Dr. Stauffer: "The word lymphatics is derived from 'lympha,' meaning water. A lymphatic, previous to entering a gland, divides into smaller branches of afferent vessels as a water carrier. On emerging from this gland, there is another plexus formed, called efferent vessels. Gray divides the glands of the head and neck into the superficial and deep lymphatics, further subdividing them according to their location. All these glands drain into the lymphatic glands of the neck, where they further divide into the superficial and deep cervical groups. These glands drain immediately into the thoracic duct as it empties into the large innominate vein at the root of the neck, whence the circulation of the lymph is carried to the heart and lungs."

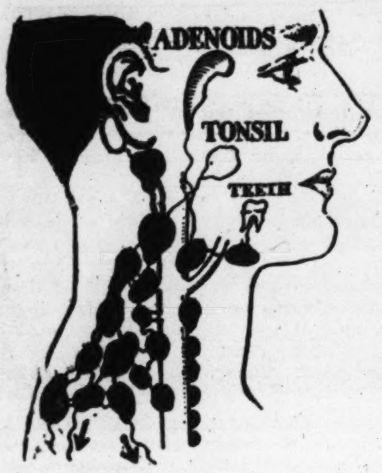

Diagram showing how the lymphatics of the adenoids, tonsils, ears and teeth drain into the neck glands.

Through these glands infection, especially tuberculous, may reach the lungs even more easily than through the air passages. "These cervical glands are acting sentinels (or forts) lying under or below the adenoids, tonsils, teeth and ears, and their duty is immediately to try to repel or destroy any invading host. If unable, they call upon the body for reinforcements, whereupon the gland enlarges. If the invading host is more powerful, the gland supperates."

Adenoids were not discovered until recently, but ancient pictures show that they are no new disease. For example, the portrait of Emperor Ferdinand I of Germany, painted more than 400 years ago, by the great Dutch artist, Lucas of Leyden, now in the gallery of Florence, is typical of an adenoid face. The original was a mouth-breather, through his nasal passages being obstructed by adenoid growths.

Adenoids become enlarged through irritation and then inflammation. Children snuffle instead of blowing their noses when they have colds in the head, consequently the nasal discharges are retained, engorging the bones and tissues and further blocking the passages.

If they are not removed they establish a habit of mouth-breathing and the neck glands become infected.

Dr. Stauffer relates that after noticing the connection between neck glands and swollen tonsils and adenoids he determined to take his next case of a child with inflamed glands and operate on the adenoids alone and watch the result.

Soon afterward a patient was brought to him with glands the size of a peach stone, and hard; a mouth-breather, with enlarged tonsils and afflicted with terrors in the dark. He removed the adenoids and tonsils, whereupon the glands became smaller, and now, four years later, the boy is healthy and robust. Since then he has found it sufficient to pursue the same course whenever the glands have not reached the suppurating stage.

"Adenoid patients," says Dr. Stauffer, "are mouth-breathers and usually have trouble with their teeth, either early or late in life." Nasal obstruction is a common cause of contracted palates and malocclusion. This again causes adenoid growth.

The ears also need attention at the first sign of trouble. For if the discharge be not stopped the neck glands will become affected; the child will be dull mentally, easily exhausted and finally will become deaf.

To secure permanent cure Dr. Stauffer advises:

"1. Early cleansing of nose, teeth and ears.

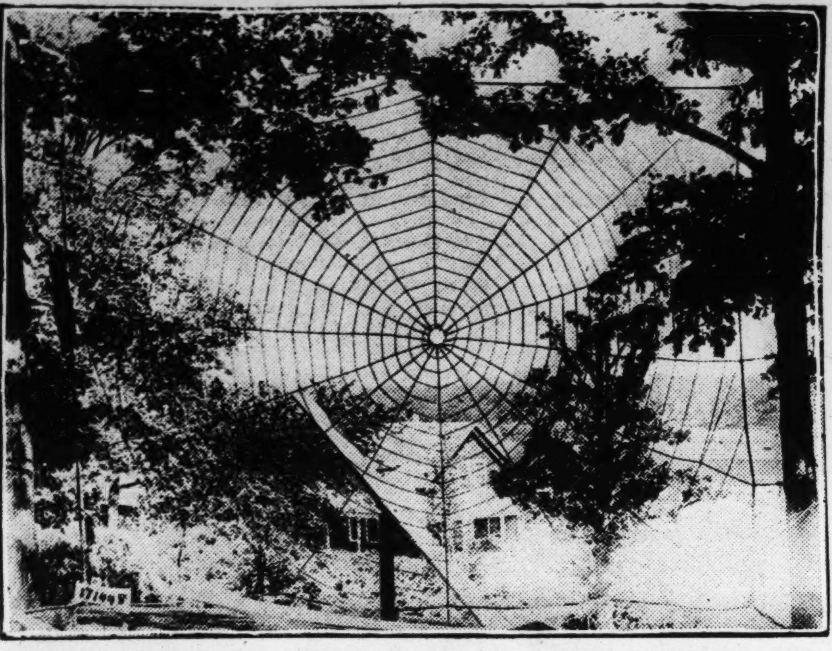
"2. Early removal of adenoids and tonsils by complete dissection.

"3. Early adjustment of irregular teeth or removal of decayed roots.

"4. Early mastoid operation for any purulent otitis media present.

"5. Plenty of good food, regular baths, exercise and plenty of sleep. These children with enlarged glands are being poisoned by the toxins from the lymphatic glands. Their adenoids and tonsils block the air supply from their lungs and deprive them of oxygen. It is essential to the growing child to have plenty of fresh air, day and night."

The World's Largest Spider Web Was Man-Made



THE world's largest spider web stands on the lawn of a Chicago man's country home and is of such tremendous size as to startle the passer-by when first he sees it. The immense web is not the work of a spider, but is the result of a man's attempt to see how closely he could reproduce a spider's web with rope. Selecting two immense trees on the lawn of his home, he spun between them this spider's web forty by sixty feet and made it so strong that a boy or man can easily climb to the center or top of it. The web faces the main thoroughfare which passes the house and as a country decoration is a most fascinating one. The spinner could not attain the minuteness of the actual spider's work, but came so near to it that the illusion is almost perfect. The uniqueness of the undertaking catches and fascinates every eye which sees it.

Why Death Is a Matter of No Importance to Savages

THE difference between a "savage" and a civilized man is an unbridgable gulf, according to Sir Everard im Thurn, former Governor of Fiji, whose lifetime of experience among savage and semi-savage peoples gives him the right to speak with authority, as he did at the Australian meeting of the British Association.

The primitive Fijian, for example, took things as they came, asking few questions about the how, the whence and the why. The world in which he lived was limitless, even though he could see only a small part of it. His ancestors were out of sight, but none the less existent, and even he, in what we should call his dreams, but which were to him as real as everything else, went beyond the line and always returned home again. He was a spiritualist. Death to him was nothing. He had no definite "beliefs," he had no religion, but he knew that the essential part of himself was separable from the body, was untrammeled by time and space. Death then, was no break in his continuity, and it was therefore a matter of indifference to him when, where or how it came. He had no idea of a spiritual body that did not or could not associate itself with some human, animal or other material body.

Other beings differed from himself only in the unimportant matter of bodily form, and it seemed to him easy for these to pass from one body to another. They were "souls," only "temporarily and more or less loosely attached to the particular material forms in which they happened to manifest themselves," and these forms mattered little or nothing.

The uncivilized man acted only for his personal interests. He could imagine no others. "To him all that we should class as goods and chattels, his land, or even his own body, was his only so long as he could retain it. He might, if he could and would, take any such property from another entirely without impropriety; nor would he resist, or even wish to resist, the taking from himself of any such property by anyone who could and would take it."

He was kind to strangers if he was afraid of them or if they could be of use to him. When familiarity bred contempt he killed them as nuisances. If he dreaded a white man before he killed him, he dreaded him just as much after he was dead. The victim survived as long as he was remembered. Capt. Cook, for example, survives still among the Fijians.

Sir Everard im Thurn believes that the real savage cannot be civilized except by a process lasting through many generations.

Why Hens Stop Laying in Winter

THAT hens stop laying as winter progresses is a fact known to every farmer and chicken fancier; also, indirectly, to every housewife through the rise in the price of eggs. The reason is explained by the Revue Scientifique, which says that the egg-producing organs degenerate through too much fat. This condition is the consequence of too great abundance of food during the winter, coupled with lack of exercise, due to the narrow limits of the ordinary chicken-run.

The fat invades the liver and piles up in the heart; the blood becomes sluggish and the lungs do not take up enough oxygen to insure combustion of the fat.

"The obvious remedy," says the Scientific American, "is to give less food to hens which stop laying." Mr. Brochemin, in an article in L'Acclimatation, advises that starchy foods, such as corn, rice and barley, be limited, while an abundance of such green food as cabbage, boiled clover, sorrel, etc., be given. Also the hens must be made to take exercise, by giving them a large run and by mixing their food with straw, etc., so that they will have to work for their food.

Making Deserts Fruitful Fields

NATURE has set up four kinds of barriers to man's conquest of the earth—mountains, forests, deserts, rivers. The first he cannot remove; so he bores holes through them for his railways. The second he has, most unwisely, largely cleared away altogether. The third he is beginning to treat like the forests. The fourth he is shifting to suit his purposes and to regulate their flow at will.

Man flies now over all boundaries. He cuts through isthmuses to remove the barriers between the seas.

Into the deserts man sends railroads, telegraph lines, irrigation engineers. The "Great American Desert" marked upon the atlases of our fathers has ceased to exist. The vast "desert" of Northwestern Canada has become a boundless prairie of waving wheat. The Landes of Gascony are now much more than half covered with pine trees. In 1902, 22,000 square miles of the Algerian desert had been made fruitful by artesian wells. The "Australian desert" is rapidly being irrigated and turned into grazing land. Almost 70,000 square miles of "desert" in India has been reclaimed. Sir William Willcocks is now engaged in reclaiming 19,000 square miles of the delta of the Tigris and Euphrates, and more than 4000 square miles of the Gezireh Plain between the Blue and White Nile and being transformed into cotton plantations.

Look in Siberia for the Superman

SIBERIA'S unique population should possess considerable interest for the eugenists, says the New York Medical Journal. From 1658 until 1900, from 2000 to 20,000 Russians were exiled annually to Siberia, mainly for voicing ideas and opinions which favored democracy and other modern theories; in other words, the inhabitants of the territory seem always to have been men and women of original habits of thought, of mental qualifications which would have made them prominent and distinguished under a form of government more like our own.

As we understand it these exiles have lived an outdoor life, rigorous, perhaps, but of the most healthful kind. Consequently we find in Siberia a most unusual combination of intellectual equipment of high quality with physical surroundings adapted to furnish bodily vigor and excellent health, a union produced by accident of the exact kind that eugenists are striving to effect by design.

The colonization of Siberia by the method above referred to practically ceased 14 years ago; there should be now, even in the absence of first rate schools, a population with most exceptional gifts, veritable supermen if the theories of the eugenists are soundly based.

DANGER

The story of a war waged by submarines

BY SIR A. CONAN DOYLE

the creator of "Sherlock Holmes"

III.

Britain has been throttled by little Norland. Rudely awakened from her delusion that the enemy would not torpedo merchant vessels, England is suddenly confronted with starvation, revolution and financial ruin. Half a dozen submarines under command of the resourceful Capt. Sirius, have done the trick. And now Sirius, telling his own marvelous story, shows how he made a proud and mighty empire beg for mercy, simply by taking a timely advantage of a weakness which statesmanship of the near future will surely remedy.

ALL traffic had stopped for London—not so bad for the little Iota—and we did not see a steamer that was worth a torpedo between Dungeness and the Isle of Wight. There I called Stephan up by wireless, and by 7 o'clock we were actually lying side by side in a smooth, rolling sea—Hengsbury Head, bearing N.N.W., and about five miles distant. The two crews clustered on the whalebacks and shouted their joy at seeing friendly faces once more. Stephan had done extraordinarily well. I had, of course, read in the London paper of his four ships on Tuesday, but he had sunk no fewer than seven since, for many of those which should have come to the Thames had tried to make Southampton. Of the seven, one was of 20,000 tons, a grain ship from America; a second was a grain ship from the Black Sea, and two others were great liners from South Africa.

I congratulated Stephan with all my heart upon his splendid achievement. Then, as we had been seen by a destroyer which was approaching at a great pace, we both dived, coming up again off the Needles, where we spent the night in company. We could not visit each other, since we had no boat, but we lay so nearly alongside that we were able, Stephan and I, to talk from hatch to hatch and so make our plans.

He had shot away more than half his torpedoes and so had I, and yet we were very averse from returning to our base so long as our oil held out. I told him of my experience with the Boston steamer, and we mutually agreed to sink the ships by gunfire in future, so far as possible. I remember old Horli saying: "What use is a gun aboard a submarine?" We were about to show. I read the English paper to Stephan by the light of my electric torch and we both agreed that few ships would now come up the channel. That sentence about diverting commerce to safer routes could only mean that the ships would go round the north of Ireland and unload at Glasgow. Oh, for two more ships to stop that entrance! Heavens, what would England have done against a foe with thirty or forty submarines, since we only needed six instead of four to complete her destruction!

AFTER much talk we decided that the best plan would be that I should dispatch a cipher telegram next morning from a French port to tell them to send the four second-rate boats to cruise off the north of Ireland and west of Scotland. Then when I had done this I should move down channel with Stephan and operate at the mouth, while the other two boats could work in the Irish Sea. Having made these plans, I set off across the channel in the early morning, reaching the small village of Etretat, in Brittany. There I got off my telegram and then laid my course for Falmouth, passing under the keels of two British cruisers which were making eagerly for Etretat, having heard by wireless that we were there.

Halfway down channel we had trouble with a short circuit in our electric engines, and were compelled to run on the surface for several hours while we replaced one of the cam shafts and renewed some washers. It was a ticklish time, for had a torpedo boat come upon us we could not have dived. The perfect submarine of the future will surely have some alternative engines for such an emergency. However, by the skill of Engineer Morro we got things going once more. All the time we lay there I saw a hydroplane floating between us and the British coast. I can understand how a mouse feels when it is in a tuft of grass and sees a hawk high up in the heavens. However, all went well; the mouse became a water rat, it wagged its tail in derision at the poor blind old hawk, and it dived down into a nice, safe, green, quiet world where there was nothing to injure it.

It was on Wednesday night that the Iota crossed to Etretat. It was Friday afternoon before we had reached our new cruising ground. Only one large steamer did I see on our way. The terror we had caused had cleared the channel. This big boat had a clever captain on board. His tactics were excellent and took him in safety to the Thames. He came zigzagging up channel at 25 knots, shooting off from his course at all sorts of unexpected angles. With our slow pace we could not catch him, nor could we calculate his line so as to cut him off. Of course, he had never seen us, but he judged, and judged rightly, that wherever we were, those were the tactics by which he had the best chance of getting past. He deserved his success.

But, of course, it is only in a wide channel that such things can be done. Had I met him in the mouth of the Thames there would have been a different story to tell. As I approached Falmouth I destroyed a 3000-ton boat from Cork, laden with butter and cheese. It was my only success for three days.

THAT night (Friday, April 16) I called up Stephan, but received no reply. As I was within a few miles of our rendezvous, and as he would not be cruising after dark, I was puzzled to account for his silence. I could only imagine that his wireless was deranged. But, alas! I was soon to find the true reason from a copy of the Western Morning News, which I obtained from a Brixham trawler. The Kappa, with her gallant commander and crew were at the bottom of the English Channel.

It appeared from this account that after I had parted from him he had met and sunk no fewer than five vessels. I gathered this to be his work, since all of them were by gunfire and all were on the south coast of Dorset or Devon. How he met his fate was stated in a short telegram which was headed "Sinking of a Hostile Submarine." It was marked "Falmouth," and ran thus:

"The P. & O. mail steamer Macedonia came into this port last night with five shell holes between wind and water. She reports having been attacked by a hostile submarine 10 miles to the southeast of Lizard. Instead of using her torpedoes, the submarine, for some reason, approached upon the surface and fired five shots from a semi-automatic 12-pounder gun. She was evidently under the impression that the Macedonia was unarmed. As a matter of fact, being warned of the presence of submarines in the channel, the Macedonia had mounted her armament as an auxiliary cruiser. She opened fire with two quick-firers and blew away the conning tower of the submarine. It is probable that the shells went right through her, as she sank at once with her hatches open. The Macedonia was only kept afloat by her pumps."

Such was the end of the Kappa and my gallant friend, Commander Stephan. His best epitaph was in a corner of the same paper and was headed "Mark Lane." It ran: "Wheat (average) 66, maize 48, barley 50."

WELL, if Stephan was gone there was the more need for me to show energy. My plans were quickly taken, but they were comprehensive. All that day (Saturday) I passed down the Cornish coast and round Land's End, getting two steamers on the way. I had learned from Stephan's fate that it was better to torpedo the large craft, but I was aware that the auxiliary cruisers of the British Government were all over 10,000 tons, so that for all ships under that size it was safe to use my gun. Both these craft, the Yelland and the Playboy—the latter an American ship—were perfectly harmless, so I came up within a hundred yards of them and speedily sank them, after allowing their people to get into boats. Some other steamers lay farther out, but I was so eager to make my new arrangements that I did not go out of my course to molest them. Just before sunset, however, so magnificent a prey came within my radius of action that I could not possibly refuse her.

No sailor could fail to recognize that glorious monarch of the sea, with her four cream funnels tipped with black, her huge black sides, her red bilges and her high white hamper, roaring up channel at 23 knots and carrying her 45,000 tons as lightly as if she were a five-ton motor boat. It was the queenly Olympic of the White Star Line—once the largest and still the comeliest of liners. What a picture she made, with the blue Cornish sea creaming round her giant forefoot, and the pink western sky with one evening star forming the background to her noble lines!

She was about five miles off when we dived to cut her off. My calculation was exact. As we came abreast we loosed our torpedo and struck her fair. We swirled round with the concussion of the water. I saw her in my periscope list over on her side, and I knew that she had her death blow. She settled down slowly, and there was plenty of time to save her people. The sea was dotted with her boats. When I got about three miles off I rose to the surface, and the whole crew clustered up to see the wonderful sight. She dived bow foremost, and there was a terrific explosion, which sent one of the funnels into the air. I suppose we should have cheered—somehow none of us felt like cheering. We were all keen sailors, and it went to our hearts to see such a ship go down like a broken egg shell. I gave a gruff order, and all were at their posts again while we headed northwest. Once round the Land's End I called up my two consorts, and we met next day at Hartland Point, the south end of Biddeford Bay. For the moment the channel was clear, but the English could not know it, and I reckoned that the loss of the Olympic would stop all ships for a day or two at least.

HAVING assembled the Delta and Epsilon, one on each side of me, I received reports from Miriam and Var, the respective commanders. Each had expended 12 torpedoes, and between them they had sunk 22 steamers. One man had been killed by the machinery on board of the Delta, and two had been burned by the ignition of some oil on the Epsilon. I took these injured men on board and I gave each of the boats one of my crew. I also divided my spare oil, my provisions and my torpedoes among them, though we had the greatest possible difficulty in those crank vessels in transferring them from one to the other. However, by 10 o'clock it was done, and the two vessels were in condition to keep the sea for another 10 days. For my part, with only two torpedoes left, I headed north up the Irish Sea. One of my torpedoes I expended that evening upon a cattle ship making for Milford Haven. Late at night, being abreast of Holyhead, I called up on my four northern boats, but without reply. Their Marconi range is very limited. About 3 in the afternoon of the next day I had a feeble answer. It was a great relief to me to find that my telegraphic instructions had reached them and that they were on their station. Before evening we all assembled in the lee of Sanda Island, in the Mull of Kintyre. I felt an Admiral indeed when I saw my five whalebacks all in a row. Panza's report was excellent. They had come around by the Pentland Firth and reached their cruising ground on the fourth day. Already they had destroyed 20 vessels without any mishap. I ordered the Beta to divide her oil and torpedoes among the other three, so that they were in good condition to continue their cruise. Then the Beta and I headed for home, reaching our base upon Sunday, April 25. Off Cape Wrath I picked up a paper from a small schooner.

"Wheat 84, maize 60, barley 62." What were battles and bombardments compared to that!

The whole coast of Norland was closely blockaded by cordon within cordon, and every port, even the smallest, held by the British, but why should they suspect my modest confectioner's villa more than any other of the 10,000 houses that face the sea? I was glad when I picked up its homely white front in my periscope. That night I landed and found my stores intact. Before morning the Beta reported itself, for we have the windows lit as a guide.

It is not for me to recount the messages which I found waiting for me at my humble headquarters. They shall ever remain as the patents of nobility of my family. Among the others was that never-to-be forgotten salutation from my King. He desired me to present myself at Hauptville, but for once I took it upon myself to disobey his command. It took me two days—or rather two nights, for we sank ourselves during the daylight hours—to get all our stores on board, but my presence was needed every minute of the time. On the third morning, at 4 o'clock, the Beta and my own little flagship were at sea once more, bound for our original station off the mouth of the Thames.

I HAD no time to read our papers while I was refitting, but I gathered the news after we got under way. The British occupied all our ports, but otherwise we had not suffered at all, since we have excellent railway communications with Europe. Prices had altered little, and our industries continued as before. There was talk of a British invasion, but this I knew to be absolute nonsense, for the British must have learned by this time that it would be sheer murder to send transports full of soldiers to sea in the face of submarines. When they have a tunnel they can use their fine expeditionary force upon the continent, but until then it might just as well not exist, so far as Europe is concerned. My own country, therefore, was in good case and had nothing to fear. Great Britain, however, was already feeling my grip upon her throat. As in normal times four-fifths of her food is imported, prices were rising by leaps and bounds. The supplies in the country were beginning to show signs of depletion, while little was coming in to replace them. The insurance at Lloyd's had risen to a figure which made the price of food prohibitive to the mass of the people by the time it had reached the market. The loaf, which under ordinary circumstances stood at 5 pence, was already at one shilling twopence. Beef was 3 shillings fourpence a pound, and mutton 2 shillings ninepence. Everything else was in proportion. The Government had acted with energy and offered a big bounty for corn to be planted at once. It could only be reaped five months hence, however, and long before then, as the papers pointed out, half the island would be dead from starvation.

Strong appeals had been made to the patriotism of the people and they were assured that the interference with trade was temporary, and that with a little patience all would be well. But already there was a marked rise in the death rate, especially among children, who suffered from want of milk, the cattle being slaughtered for food. There was serious rioting in the Lanarkshire coal fields and in the Midlands, together with a Socialistic upheaval in the East of London, which had assumed the proportions of a civil war. Already there were responsible papers which declared that England was in an impossible position, and that an immediate peace was necessary to prevent one of the greatest tragedies in history. It was my task now to prove to them that they were right.

IT was May 2 when I found myself back at the Maplin Sands to the north of the estuary of the Thames. The Beta was sent on to the Solent to block it and take the place of the lamented Kappa. And now I was throttling Britain indeed—London, Southampton, the Bristol Channel, Liverpool, the North Channel, the Glasgow approaches each was guarded by my boats. Great liners were, as we learned afterward, pouring their supplies into Galway and the west of Ireland, where provisions were cheaper than had ever been known. Tens of thousands were embarking from Britain for Ireland in order to save themselves from starvation. But you cannot transplant a whole dense population. The main body of the people, by the middle of May, were actually starving. At that date wheat was at a hundred, maize and barley at 80. Even the most obsti-

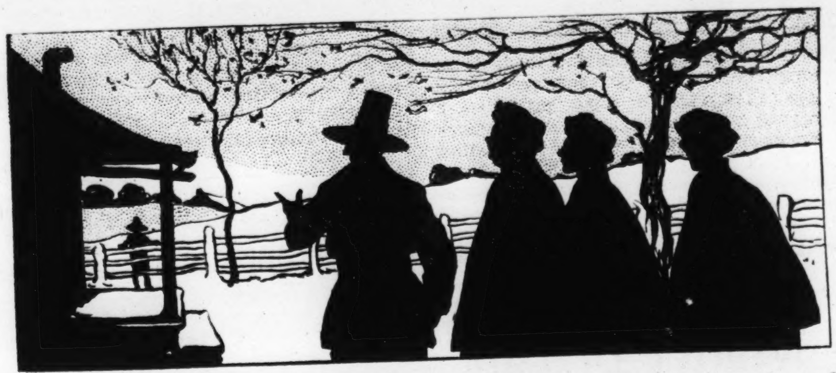
ST. LOUIS WOMAN PRIZE-WINNING "MOVIE" PLAYWRIGHT

MISS CAROLINE B. WELLS.

Third award in big competition goes to Miss Caroline B. Wells, who never before had a photoplay accepted ❧ Found plot of her camera comedy, "A Puritan's Conscience," while studying patterns in a red rug

IT looks much like any other rug—some 10 feet square in dimensions, garish red in color, variegated with brown scroll patterns—as it lies on the floor of a little studio at 2708 South Eleventh street, St. Louis. But Miss Caroline Benbrooke Wells, for one, is firmly convinced that this is the magic carpet on which she was transported afar to fame as a prize winner in a moving picture scenario contest, recently adjudged.

While marching back and forth across the rug, her eyes intently poring upon its cabalistic designs, Miss Wells caught, as if in a flash, the plot which enabled her, who had never had a photoplay produced, to triumph in a competition in which she had 3645 rivals, some of them veteran authors and prize takers in that field. In this host of manuscripts, that contributed by the St. Louis novice proved to stand third. By the narrowest of margins, the first and second prizes went to photoplay writers of established reputation—the first of Roy L. McCardell of the New York World and Post-Dispatch staff, and the second to Miss Elaine Sterne of New York.



Villagers are much perturbed by arrival of Puritan White, his wife and three daughters in outlandish costume.

How very narrow that margin was—how extremely close Miss Wells' fairy carpet came to bearing her into the haven of the first prize itself—may be learned from the following pronouncement of the judges:

"Illustrative of the worth of the three prize-winning scripts, it may be said that on points, by which the judges made their decision, Mr. McCardell received 98, Miss Sterne 97 and Miss Wells 96—perfect score being 100. It took the judges three days of constant discussion to decide between the three. Point by point the scenarios were considered and reconsidered. It was the sitting of a jury, ballot after ballot being taken to arrive at a unanimous decision. On the arrive at a unanimous decision. On the nineteenth ballot the jury was unanimous, and the awards were made as before stated."

Miss Wells' camera comedy, culled from the intricacies of the scroll patterns of her rug, is entitled "A Puritan's Conscience." Unconsciously testifying to the efficacy of the wondrous carpet as a source of inspiration, the judges continue:

"'A Puritan's Conscience,' by Miss Wells, is unique. The author has conceived a story of remarkable situations, quaint and yet of convincing interest. Unlike Mr. McCardell and Miss Sterne, she has taken an inherited scruple for the basis of her play, rather than a living circumstance around which to build her story.

"It is hailed as one of the cleverest moving picture comedies yet produced, and will establish Miss Wells as a writer of comedies among the millions of moving picture patrons who will view her work."

The contest, said to have been the largest of its kind ever conducted, was promoted by a New York newspaper and by a well-known firm of film manufacturers The prizes have just been awarded—$1000 to McCardell, $500 to Miss Sterne and $250 to Miss Wells. It is true that the difference between $1000 and $250 is considerable, but one must remember that McCardell defeated Miss Wells by only two points out of 100.

Miss Wells' agreement under the terms of the contest make it impossible to give a complete resume of her successful photoplay, only a sketch, outlining its possibilities, being available:

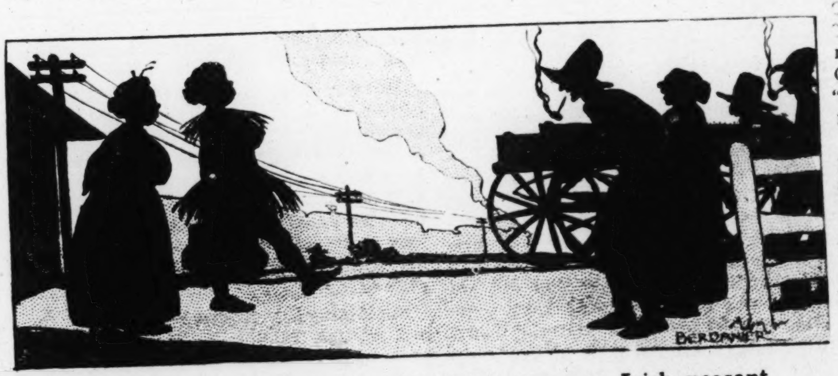
Puritan and Purity White are children of Massachusetts parents, whose ancestors came over in the Mayflower, and are reared according to the strictest tenets of the Roundheads.

They separate in childhood and Puritan White comes to St. Louis to seek his fortune. In 25 years he acquires several millions, and in the process loses practically all of his Puritan veneer. He becomes, indeed, worldly and fashionable, his wife, his two daughters and his son becoming prominent in society.

Purity White also marries and is now a wealthy widow with a grown daughter. She, too, has gradually sloughed off the Puritan skin and is as worldly a dowager as the Back Bay can furnish. These changes in point of view have been religiously concealed from each other by the brother and sister.

Puritan White is horrified at receiving a letter from his sister stating her intention of visiting him, as they have not seen each other for a quarter of a century. There is a hasty conference of the St. Louis family. It will never, never do for Purity to find her relatives living unrighteously in a mansion, lackeyed by a crowd of servants, indulging in the modern dances and all the gay frivolities of society. So they precipitately hire a little cottage in a suburb of St. Louis which the author charitably conceals under the name of "Squashville," and betake themselves thither, without servants. Still further to carry on the deception, they don costumes worn in the days of Miles Standish and of Priscilla Mullins, who was faint-heartedly beloved of John Alden.

On her side, Purity and her daughter are just as anxious to conceal their worldliness from what they believe to be the austere eyes of their St. Louis kindred, and are also dressed in Puritan costume when they arrive at Squashville. Each side is convinced that it is successfully duping the other, and the farcical complications arising may be imagined.



Dinah arrives as a Congo savage; Bridget, as an Irish peasant.

To name one of them, the denizens of Squashville, perceiving the advent of Puritan White and his wife and daughters in outlandish attire, can make nothing of the prodigy unless it be that the party is a Mormon elder and his three wives. When Purity and her daughter, in the same garb, appear, the village gasps: "Two more wives!"

A still worse shock is due for the rustic sensibilities. The cottage's cookery not prospering, White sends into St. Louis for his negro cook, Dinah, and also summons the Hibernian laundress, Bridget. He instructs them to come in "ancestral attire," meaning that of his own ancestors. They blunder, quite excusably, and turn up in Squashville in literal obediance—Dinah as a Congo savage and Bridget as an Irish peasant. "Two more wives—seven in all—and one of them black at that!" shudders Squashville.

It is high time for a sanctified village to assert itself, and presently White and his family, with his sister and niece, find themselves in the Squashville calaboose. It is a fine pickle for descendants of Puritans—to be haled behind the bars as menaces to public morality. The double deception is revealed, and soon all are installed in the big St. Louis mansion, where they reflect, more or less logically: "Though we be worldly and wealthy, we need not be wicked so long as we possess a Puritan's conscience."

Miss Wells' success comes to her as the first reward of two years' hard work. During that time, wearing paths in the nap of her rug, as she tramped to and fro, she has written movie play after play, none of which was ever accepted prior to the prize winner. But she was not discouraged, sensibly aware that a beginner must learn the technique of photoplay writing through long and hard labor; and after each reverse merely scrutinized a little more intently the patterns of her magic carpet before trying again.

She lives at 6017 Etzel avenue, but keeps a studio in South Eleventh street for the sake of quiet. She is a daughter of the late Hasten Wells, a pioneer St. Louis business man. She was christened May Caroline Wells, but to avoid confusion with Carolyn Wells, writer of favorably known nonsense verses, introduced between her Christian name and her surname the name "Benbrooke," one which had been in her family.

Miss Wells yielded two points and one point to no common rivals when the first and second prizes went to McCardell and Miss Sterne. The former has, since 1890, written and had filmed more than 1000 photo dramas, and has been a redoubtable winner of prizes in contests such as this. Miss Sterne's first scenario was accepted a year ago, and she has since won first and second prizes in other photoplay contests, besides winning a prize in a magazine short-story competition. Since the results of the contest were announced, Miss Wells has received numerous letters from film manufacturers requesting her to submit manuscripts, and she now considers her fortune made in the field of camera drama. She will continue to study patterns of the rug which carried her to her first success.

Uncle Sam's Diving Torpedo Boat, Latest Submarine Marvel

AMERICAN readers who have been amazed at the wonderful efficiency of submarines in the present European war, and who have got into the habit of shaking their heads in doubt whenever someone has asked how our own warships will compare with those of the belligerents, should be cheered by the latest naval news from Washington.

Backed by the authority of Secretary of the Navy Daniels, the announcement comes that the United States is preparing the deadliest small warship ever built. It is a torpedo boat and a submarine combined, yet it is more powerful than any torpedo-boat destroyer.

The details of its construction are, of course, a secret; but the Navy Department is so satisfied that it has been willing to spend some $1,300,000 to build it.

From all that can be learned, the new terror will be 300 feet long, will have 12 torpedo tubes and will mount rapid-fire guns. It will have a range of 5000 miles without recoaling and will be able to make a trip from New York to Liverpool without having to take on supplies. It will be as speedy as the biggest battleship and available for scout duty with a fleet. Submerged, it will be far faster and more powerful than any under-water boat in existence. It can fight as effectively on the surface as when below and will carry a crew of twenty-five or thirty men in comfort, when it is submerged for a longer time than any existing submarine can remain below.

It is really a diving torpedo-boat destroyer and the Navy Department thinks well of it. Secretary Daniels, in a recent letter, said:

"While the policy of our own and foreign natives is to keep secret the characteristics of all war craft, and particularly so in the case of submarines, I feel warranted in stating that this sea-going submarine will excel any foreign submarine so far projected."

"The Mother of the Dead"

First of Notable Sculptures Inspired by the Great War

THIS striking piece, by C. S. Pietro, won great praise in a New York exhibition of sculptors and artists for the benefit of sufferers in the European war. The story is told with dignity and pathos. A grief-stricken old peasant woman, her frightened grandchild at her knee, staring with eyes which do not understand, is seated in an attitude of profound despair. The knotted hand tells her station in life, and the bowed head, the drooping shoulders and sunken chest and, more than all else, the lines of the face proclaim a sorrow too deep for tears. The eyes burn their mute appeal into the heart of the beholder. They seem to gaze into the years that have gone; they see no future, but behold only the vision of the son torn and dead in battle.

GERMAN AND ITALIAN CHANTS OF HATRED

Ernest Lissauer in 'Jugend"

Rendered Into English by Barbara Henderson.

FRENCH and Russian, they matter not,
A blow for a blow, and a shot for a shot;
We love them not, we hate them not,
We hold the Weichsel and Vosges gate.
We have but one and only hate.
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone.

He is known to you all, he is known to you all,
He crouches behind the dark gray flood,
Full of envy, of rage, of craft, of gall,
Cut off by waves that are thicker than blood.
Come let us stand at the Judgment place,
An oath to swear to, face to face,
An oath of bronze no wind can shake,
An oath for our sons and their sons to take.
Come, hear the word, repeat the word,
Throughout the Fatherland make it heard.
We will never forego our hate,
We have all but a single hate.
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone—
England!
In the Captain's mess, in the banquet hall,
Sat feasting the officers, one and all,
Like a saber blow, like the swing of a sail,
One seized his glass held high to hail;
Sharp-snapped like the stroke of a rudder's play,
Spoke three words only: "To the Day!"
Take you the folk of the earth in pay,
With bars of gold your ramparts lay,
Bedeck the ocean with bow on bow,
Ye reckon well, but not well enough now.
French and Russian, they matter not.
A blow for a blow, a shot for a shot.
You will hate with a lasting hate,
We will never forego our hate,
Hate by water and hate by land,
Hate of the head and hate of the hand,
Hate of the hammer and hate of the crown,
Hate of seventy millions, choking down,
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone—
England!

Gabriel d'Annunzio's Poem, "Arise Italia"

Translated by Walter Littlefield.

THY day is dawning! Thy golden day is here!
Thy sister stands erect in the blazing sun.
She is clad in the purple robe of war.
Twofold wings gird her naked feet.
Bathed in her burning tears,
Bathed in her bitter blood,
Flower sublime of discord,
Never with beauty so great
Even in times of her kingdom.
Of all her dripping sores
She has made a wondrous dew,
With the multitude of her sins
She revives her morning star!

Like the double-edged ax of war
Gleams her energy to win
In the transparent depths of her eyes,
Like the skylark she's ready to sing
On the fathomless summits of death.
Reseated, with tireless hands,
A new world fabric she'll weave,
With barbarian alone against her,
Who shall be with her, if not thou?

The exalted, the elected are we,
And we'll crush the hideous tribe.
We will wage war facing the light.
We will smile when we have to die,
For, 'tis the sacred hour, O Latins,
Of the reaping and the fighting.

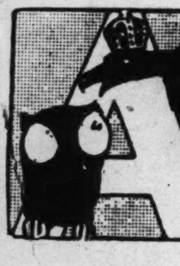
Women, take scythes and reap!
Prepare new bread for new hunger!
Your men as compact as ears of corn
Will strike hard, rank against rank,
Like stiff wheat under the Eastern wind.
O Victory, unrelenting reaper,
I feel upon my forehead, waiting,
The freshness of the dawn.
As priest of Mars to Lanuvium children,
I say: "Ye have heard that which pleaseth the god.
Hasten your hour, obey, and go forth.
Ye are the seed of a new world,
And auroras most wondrous are yet to be born."

(These are but the last stanzas of an impassioned arraignment of Austria, as Italy's hereditary foe, and of appeal to Italy to arise and seek her revenge.)

A MILLION GERMAN BABIES

BY GERALD STANLEY LEE

Author of "Crowds," "The Inspired Millionaires," etc.



A MILLION new children every year appear in Germany.

They look up in the faces of their fathers and mothers and smile and say: "What are you going to do with us?"

The fathers and mothers in the houses and factories and streets and in the shops and fields go about wondering. They do not know.

Nearly every day the million new babies smile and look up in the faces of their fathers and mothers and say it again.

In another short year a million more look up and smile and say—they say it all through Germany to the fathers and to the mothers—"What are you going to do with us?"

To an American it seems simple enough. Ten million uncles and aunts and nephews on farms and in stores and in factories all the way from Ellis Island to Seattle write letters and say it's fine over here, and send money orders.

If you are a German father or mother and find yourself looking into the inquiring face of say the nine hundred and sixty-eight thousand three hundred and sixty-seventh surplus German baby—if you find yourself looking into the face of No. 968,367 Extra, which the German Government does not know where to put or really see any use for—why should you worry so long as there is a great roomy country like the United States looking out for him and waiting for him—why should anyone—even his own father and mother, worry about No. 968,367?

Let him laugh and cry and gurgle and sleep. There is room somewhere for him and if not, he has got it in him (anybody can see it as he laughs and kicks) he will make room for himself. He began by making room in one house well enough and he will keep it up on the planet.

This is the way an American would put it to the German father and mother.

Anyway I would.

But this morning as I sat in the train and watched Ohio and Indiana slip past the window, and looked at the great barns and yellow harvests of the farmers, and thought of the fields of battle of the Germans and the French, I found myself thinking of the Germans in a new way.

I had been spending a couple of days with a man I had known merely as the head of a great business which has dotted Russia, China, France and Germany and the fields of the world with its machines. I had never seen him with his family about him before.

The little four-year-old child who ran in and climbed up on him, spoke to him in German. As his wife was an American and as he certainly was an American, and had always had a tremendous interest in American political parties, personalities and programs, and had taken no small share in the most utterly and typically American movement in politics that this country has ever known, and as I had looked upon him as one of the masters and interpreters of all that is best in our American life, I was puzzled by seeing him talking with the child in his arms as if they had just moved over from Germany a year ago.

I then remembered that the main ideas he had stood for and had made his career out of, were ideas he had seized upon and seen the American bearings of while in a German University.

It came out a little later that he had quarreled with his parents and his teachers in boyhood and had run away from an American school, to Germany. As the German boy or the French boy runs away to a new country, he had run away to an old one. This was the secret of his power. His children are being taught German and are speaking it in the family while growing up, because they will have English anyway and he wants his children to get as much out of German civilization for use in America as he had got out of it for use in America. He wants the German virtues wrought in—while they are growing up—with the American virtues. Of course if there is one thing in all the world that would be becoming to our American virtues it would be to have a few German ones mixed in with them. Even if the German virtues are bad for the Germans, they are good for us.

The best way to do in getting German virtue is to get it where it is made. It cannot be taught or read. It must be breathed. One gets it best by being surrounded with thousands of people who have it and who do not even know they have it.

So as I came away from my friend's house I kept thinking, I saw how he had made a career out of his German habits of mind, out of the thoroughness and honesty of his thoughts, out of his spiritual persistence and above all out of that sense of soundness and well being which he conveyed to everything he did and to every man he met. Then suddenly without anything being said about it, it came over me how a German father might feel with a new baby Germany had no room for, looking him in the eye and saying "What are you going to do with me?"

When one sees the fathers and mothers of a great people standing on the edge of a nation watching a million children a year being pushed off into the sea or flooded away to be breathed into by strange civilizations, to have their lives seized by other ideals and by other enthusiasms, one suspects one sees what the Germans are really fighting for.

They are fighting for the right to keep on being Germans. President Wilson says they must be Americans if they come over here. Of course he is right, but everybody says it. Nobody will give anybody room to be a German, or let a German buy a little room for being a German.

This is the point. And the war came because we have been talking about peace instead of attending to it. Here was something the nations between them could do. They built a beautiful sentimental palace to peace instead.

The Germans are making a stand for the habits of their minds. They don't want to be isolated and set one at a time into a totally different human climate. All the peoples have their little ways. Looking into your boy's face before he goes away and thinking he will be coming home to you a sleek Frenchman, or a respectable Englishman, or a glig American is not a happy experience.

I am not saying that this point of view justifies the war.

How would we Americans like it ourselves?

The Germans have taken the wrong way to tell us about their million babies a year, but the idea they are trying to get into us—some of them, is all right.

The world has got to provide for those million babies. They are ours as well as Germany's. And we are going to help Germany to arrange for some room on the earth—her own room—on which to do it, when our attention is really got to it.

She is making a desperately clumsy business of getting our attention to her million babies just now; but for my part, any nation that knows enough or is buoyant enough to have a million more babies a year than the older, tireder, or (may I say) more spinsterish and maiden-aunt nations want has got to be listened to.

When one thinks of it a million surplus babies in a nation are about as neat a compliment to this planet and about as noble an appeal to the chivalry of the world as anybody could hope for from any nation.

Any way there is something about it—about that million extra babies which, if the Germans will ever stop fighting us long enough to let us think, will yet reach all people.

After the roar and darkness the Kings and Ministers at last will let the little children speak and the nations will be gentle in their hearts.

There is not a nation of us, nor a man of us all, who can take one good, square look—even in a shop window—at a pair of baby-shoes, and not think fair and straight.

LOST ONE HUSBAND, GAINED NEW ONE, IN TITANIC DISASTER

Mrs. Lucien Smith left her mate of two months on sinking ship and wed secretly last August an exhausted swimmer picked up by the boat in which she was saved

THE sinking of the Titanic, most tragic of maritime catastrophes, was the bitter field from which the flower of romance has been plucked by two of the survivors, Mrs. Eloise Hughes Smith of Huntington, W. Va., and Robert W. Daniel, president of the Robert W. Daniel banking house of Philadelphia and New York. Their secret marriage in New York on Aug. 18 has just been disclosed to the great wonder of all the circle in which they move.

Miss Eloise Hughes, as she then was, the daughter of Congressman James A. Hughes of West Virginia, made her debut in Washington society at a brilliant affair at the Hotel Willard, just two months before the Titanic disaster. A few days later she was married to Lucien Smith of New York. They went to the Continent for their honeymoon and sailed for home on the Titanic, being attracted, like so many other unfortunates, by the opportunity to make the maiden voyage of the world's finest ocean liner.

On the morning of April 14, 1912, as everyone remembers, the huge ship, racing homewards, crashed into a floating mountain of ice and was ripped asunder as a can opener rips a tin. Smith wrapped his bride of two months in furs and led her on deck. There, like other heroic husbands who could find no other means of persuading their wives to leave them to their fate, he induced her to take a place in a lifeboat by telling a noble prevarication. There was no danger, he assured her; the women were being put into the boats as a precaution and to observe the rules of the sea. It was preposterous, he declared, to think that such a ship as the Titanic could sink, and in a little while he and his wife would again be together in safety on the big liner.

So Mrs. Smith, believing that her husband was in little danger, kissed him, not knowing it was for the last time, and took her place in one of the boats. With her was another young bride, likewise about to become a widow, Mrs. John Jacob Astor. As the boat descended to the water, the two women could see their husbands leaning over the rail, high above them, and waving encouragement.

The boat bobbed about on the sea and gradually drew away from the mortally stricken giant, on the deck of which the faces of Smith and Astor became pale specks and finally indistinguishable. Although the women saw the Titanic was perceptibly settling, they were still confident that all would be well. Had not the Titanic been proclaimed an unsinkable ship?

Then came the terrible moment when the bows of the liner plunged beneath the surface and flung her stern and propellers into the air, to hang there for several minutes before she at last slid down the long reaches of water to her everlasting grave. From the sea uprose a frightful chorus of shrieks and cries from a thousand wretches in their death agony.

To both the brides in the lifeboat this tragic peal of anguish was the signal of their widowhood, and also that their children, yet unborn, had become fatherless. But they would not yet give up all to despair, largely because of an incident which, had one of the young women known it, was the dawning of a new life for her just at the moment when her old life was setting in the night of disaster.

Against their boat came drifting a swimmer, spent with exhaustion and half frozen in the icy waters. So foredone was he with his struggles that he had almost given up the fight for life. So benumbed that he could scarcely move and unable to aid himself, he was dragged over the gunwale into the boat, and sank, half dead, upon the flooring. It was Robert W. Daniel. With such a rescue occurring before her eyes, Mrs. Smith could not but hope that her husband might have been similarly saved.

Dawn brought the welcome sight of the rescue ship Carpathia, but also, when they had been taken aboard, brought to the two brides the certainty that their husbands were among the lost. Neither of them had been picked up by any of the boats. Astor's body was afterwards found, floating upright in a life preserver. That of Lucien Smith was never recovered. Some months afterwards sons were born to both widows. Mrs. Smith's son was named Lucien Smith II, in memory of his heroic father, who had given his life that women and children might be saved.

Daniel had been to London on business and was returning home on the Titanic. He waited until the gunwale of the liner was but six feet above the water and then sprang into the sea. He had swum several hundred feet when, the last ounce of his strength exhausted, he drifted into the boat which bore for him not only life but love.

Recovering from his chill swim, Daniel, on the Carpathia, introduced himself to Mrs. Smith, in whose boat he had been rescued, and attempted to console her in her grief. They who had been through so terrible an adventure together could not but become friends. And after they reached New York and had gone to their homes, the acquaintance was not dropped. They were bound together as companions in the ocean's greatest calamity.

A year passed, and the anniversary of the disaster arrived. It was proposed that on that day flowers should be strewn upon the sea at the point where Titanic went down. Mrs. Smith was one of the many widows who disapproved of this memorial rite, declaring that no good could come of reviving the memories of that awful night. It would be better, she said, to use the money to aid the poor widows and orphans of the Titanic.

Still another year passed, and it was becoming evident that the wealthy young banker was beginning to feel a deeper sentiment for the attractive Titanic widow than that sympathy which came from having passed together close under the hand of death. In due time he proposed and was accepted. Only intimate friends of the couple were informed of the wedding, which remained a secret from the public for more than two months.

On the day after the wedding Daniel was compelled to sail for London on urgent business. Owing to the war he considered that it would be difficult to care for his bride abroad, and left her in this country. It was his intention to return within three weeks, but he did not succeed in getting away from England for two months.

It was his hurried departure, he said, which prevented a formal announcement of the marriage. The announcement was made immediately after his return.

They will make their home in Philadelphia, where Mr. Daniel's business interests are chiefly.

Woman's Power Is in Her Clothes

Author of "Daddy Longlegs" Believes in Dressing Up Her Sisters and Giving Them Silk Stockings for the Enhancement of Their Morale.

"YOU can do anything in this world if you only have the right clothes,"—these daring feminist sentiments come from the philosophical pages of "Daddy Long-Legs," Jean Webster's "best seller," which has exhausted a dozen, more or less, printings and which promises as a play to go over into a second season, if its beginnings in New York are any indication.

Miss Webster does believe it, most absolutely, that, given the right clothes, a woman can do anything! Moreover, she is more than half-way convinced that life's only true orphans are those girl creatures who are denied their fundamental yearnings for soft chiffons, and—say—silk stockings!

"It is one of my favorite games," she says "to dress up girls that have lovely features and all the youth and slimness that would make of them pictures if they were only properly garbed. I see them coming out of shops in the evening, on street cars, tired and worn, after the day's work, and I feel what fun it would be to whisk this little scrap of a creature up and put her into soft and lovely garments, and give her a beautiful time for the rest of her life! I don't know why, but all fun that touches a girl seems to start in buying her new and wonderful clothes."

Miss Webster doesn't think that, important as clothes are to a woman, she dresses either for other women or for men.

"She dresses for herself, first of all," she said. "In Vassar, where there are twenty men to a thousand girls, the girls dress beautifully. At the dances they all wear evening gowns and take as much trouble to be pretty as if there were a beau for every girl instead of only girls to see them. They dress for the pleasure clothes give them. Every normal woman feels a satisfaction in her clothes if they are prety and becoming."

Jean Webster herself suggests her "Patty" of beloved memory. Added to all that young woman's charm and sense of humor, she has a streak of shyness in her manner that is part of the appeal of her later "Judy." In speaking of the success of the play she discounted anything she might have done for its success. She doesn't even find anything exciting or unsual in the fact that 'Daddy Long-Legs' has been playing to capacity since the first week it opened.

"There was one passage the London Punch quoted with great enjoyment from my book," she laughed, her finger to her forehead: "I can't ever remember the lines myself." She hunted for a copy of the book, and marked the page. The passage indicated was this:

"One can't help thinking, Daddy, what a colorless life a man is forced to lead when one reflects that chiffon and Venetian point and hand embroidery and Irish crochet are to him mere empty words. Whereas—a woman, whether she is interested in babies, or microbes, or husbands, or poetry, or servants, or parallelograms, or Plato or bridge—is fundamentally and always interested in clothes."

Now Miss Webster has had her novels to run as serials in the leading American fashion journals, and it seemed pertinent to ask her, just here, if she feels so warmly about clothes what her temperature is about American fashions.

She colored up charmingly and confessed she didn't know, and said:

"I can't imagine any joy in life greater than sitting down in front of a mirror and buying any hat you choose without having first to consider the price!"

DANGER

The story of a war waged by submarines

BY SIR A. CONAN DOYLE

the creator of "Sherlock Holmes"

III.

Britain has been throttled by little Norland. Rudely awakened from her delusion that the enemy would not torpedo merchant vessels, England is suddenly confronted with starvation, revolution and financial ruin. Half a dozen submarines under command of the resourceful Capt. Sirius, have done the trick. And now Sirius, telling his own marvelous story, shows how he made a proud and mighty empire beg for mercy, simply by taking a timely advantage of a weakness which statesmanship of the near future will surely remedy.

ALL traffic had stopped for London—not so bad for the little Iota—and we did not see a steamer that was worth a torpedo between Dungeness and the Isle of Wight. There I called Stephan up by wireless, and by 7 o'clock we were actually lying side by side in a smooth, rolling sea—Hengsbury Head, bearing N.N.W.. and about five miles distant. The two crews clustered on the whalebacks and shouted their joy at seeing friendly faces once more. Stephan had done extraordinarily well. I had, of course, read in the London paper of his four ships on Tuesday, but he had sunk no fewer than seven since, for many of those which should have come to the Thames had tried to make Southampton. Of the seven, one was of 20,000 tons, a grain ship from America; a second was a grain ship from the Black Sea, and two others were great liners from South Africa.

I congratulated Stephan with all my heart upon his splendid achievement. Then, as we had been seen by a destroyer which was approaching at a great pace, we both dived, coming up again off the Needles, where we spent the night in company. We could not visit each other, since we had no boat, but we lay so nearly alongside that we were able, Stephan and I, to talk from hatch to hatch and so make our plans.

He had shot away more than half his torpedoes and so had I, and yet we were very averse from returning to our base so long as our oil held out. I told him of my experience with the Boston steamer, and we mutually agreed to sink the ships by gunfire in future, so far as possible. I remember old Horli saying: "What use is a gun aboard a submarine?" We were about to show. I read the English paper to Stephan by the light of my electric torch and we both agreed that few ships would now come up the channel. That sentence about diverting commerce to safer routes could only mean that the ships would go round the north of Ireland and unload at Glasgow. Oh, for two more ships to stop that entrance! Heavens, what would England have done against a foe with thirty or forty submarines, since we only needed six instead of four to complete her destruction!

AFTER much talk we decided that the best plan would be that I should dispatch a cipher telegram next morning from a French port to tell them to send the four second-rate boats to cruise off the north of Ireland and west of Scotland. Then when I had done this I should move down channel with Stephan and operate at the mouth, while the other two boats could work in the Irish Sea. Having made these plans, I set off across the channel in the early morning, reaching the small village of Etretat, in Brittany. There I got off my telegram and then laid my course for Falmouth, passing under the keels of two British cruisers which were making eagerly for Etretat, having heard by wireless that we were there.

Halfway down channel we had trouble with a short circuit in our electric engines, and were compelled to run on the surface for several hours while we replaced one of the cam shafts and renewed some washers. It was a ticklish time, for had a torpedo boat come upon us we could not have dived. The perfect submarine of the future will surely have some alternative engines for such an emergency. However, by the skill of Engineer Morro we got things going once more. All the time we lay there I saw a hydroplane floating between us and the British coast. I can understand how a mouse feels when it is in a tuft of grass and sees a hawk high up in the heavens. However, all went well; the mouse became a water rat, it wagged its tail in derision at the poor blind old hawk, and it dived down into a nice, safe, green, quiet world where there was nothing to injure it.

It was on Wednesday night that the Iota crossed to Etretat. It was Friday afternoon before we had reached our new cruising ground. Only one large steamer did I see on our way. The terror we had caused had cleared the channel. This big boat had a clever captain on board. His tactics were excellent and took him in safety to the Thames. He came zigzagging up channel at 25 knots, shooting off from his course at all sorts of unexpected angles. With our slow pace we could not catch him, nor could we calculate his line so as to cut him off. Of course, he had never seen us, but he judged, and judged rightly, that wherever we were, those were the tactics by which he had the best chance of getting past. He deserved his success.

But, of course, it is only in a wide channel that such things can be done. Had I met him in the mouth of the Thames there would have been a different story to tell. As I approached Falmouth I destroyed a 3000-ton boat from Cork, laden with butter and cheese. It was my only success for three days.

THAT night (Friday, April 16) I called up Stephan, but received no reply. As I was within a few miles of our rendezvous, and as he would not be cruising after dark, I was puzzled to account for his silence. I could only imagine that his wireless was deranged. But, alas! I was soon to find the true reason from a copy of the Western Morning News, which I obtained from a Brixham trawler. The Kappa, with her gallant commander and crew were at the bottom of the English Channel.

It appeared from this account that after I had parted from him he had met and sunk no fewer than five vessels. I gathered this to be his work, since all of them were by gunfire and all were on the south coast of Dorset or Devon. How he met his fate was stated in a short telegram which was headed "Sinking of a Hostile Submarine." It was marked "Falmouth," and ran thus:

"The P. & O. mail steamer Macedonia came into this port last night with five shell holes between wind and water. She reports having been attacked by a hostile submarine 10 miles to the southeast of Lizard. Instead of using her torpedoes, the submarine, for some reason, approached upon the surface and fired five shots from a semi-automatic 12-pounder gun. She was evidently under the impression that the Macedonia was unarmed. As a matter of fact, being warned of the presence of submarines in the channel, the Macedonia had mounted her armament as an auxiliary cruiser. She opened fire with two quick-firers and blew away the conning tower of the submarine. It is probable that the shells went right through her, as she sank at once with her hatches open. The Macedonia was only kept afloat by her pumps."

Such was the end of the Kappa and my gallant friend, Commander Stephan. His best epitaph was in a corner of the same paper and was headed "Mark Lane." It ran:

"Wheat (average) 66, maize 48, barley 50."

WELL, if Stephan was gone there was the more need for me to show energy. My plans were quickly taken, but they were comprehensive. All that day (Saturday) I passed down the Cornish coast and round Land's End, getting two steamers on the way. I had learned from Stephan's fate that it was better to torpedo the large craft, but I was aware that the auxiliary cruisers of the British Government were all over 10,000 tons, so that for all ships under that size it was safe to use my gun. Both these craft, the Yelland and the Playboy—the latter an American ship—were perfectly harmless, so I came up within a hundred yards of them and speedily sank them, after allowing their people to get into boats. Some other steamers lay farther out, but I was so eager to make my new arrangements that I did not go out of my course to molest them. Just before sunset, however, so magnificent a prey came within my radius of action that I could not possibly refuse her.

No sailor could fail to recognize that glorious monarch of the sea, with her four cream funnels tipped with black, her huge black sides, her red bilges and her high white hamper, roaring up channel at 23 knots and carrying her 45,000 tons as lightly as if she were a five-ton motor boat. It was the queenly Olympic of the White Star Line—once the largest and still the comeliest of liners. What a picture she made, with the blue Cornish sea creaming round her giant forefoot, and the pink western sky with one evening star forming the background to her noble lines!

She was about five miles off when we dived to cut her off. My calculation was exact. As we came abreast we loosed our torpedo and struck her fair. We swirled round with the concussion of the water. I saw her in my periscope list over on her side, and I knew that she had her death blow. She settled down slowly, and there was plenty of time to save her people. The sea was dotted with her boats. When I got about three miles off I rose to the surface, and the whole crew clustered up to see the wonderful sight. She dived bow foremost, and there was a terrific explosion, which sent one of the funnels into the air. I suppose we should have cheered—somehow none of us felt like cheering. We were all keen sailors, and it went to our hearts to see such a ship go down like a broken egg shell. I gave a gruff order, and all were at their posts again while we headed northwest. Once round the Land's End I called up my two consorts, and we met next day at Hartland Point, the south end of Biddeford Bay. For the moment the channel was clear, but the English could not know it, and I reckoned that the loss of the Olympic would stop all ships for a day or two at least.

HAVING assembled the Delta and Epsilon, one on each side of me, I received reports from Miriam and Var, the respective commanders. Each had expended 12 torpedoes, and between them they had sunk 22 steamers. One man had been killed by the machinery on board of the Delta, and two had been burned by the ignition of some oil on the Epsilon. I took these injured men on board and I gave each of the boats one of my crew. I also divided my spare oil, my provisions and my torpedoes among them, though we had the greatest possible difficulty in those crank vessels in transferring them from one to the other. However, by 10 o'clock it was done, and the two vessels were in condition to keep the sea for another 10 days. For my part, with only two torpedoes left, I headed north up the Irish Sea. One of my torpedoes I expended that evening upon a cattle ship making for Milford Haven. Late at night, being abreast of Holyhead, I called up on my four northern boats, but without reply. Their Marconi range is very limited. About 3 in the afternoon of the next day I had a feeble answer. It was a great relief to me to find that my telegraphic instructions had reached them and that they were on their station. Before evening we all assembled in the lee of Sanda Island, in the Mull of Kintyre. I felt an Admiral indeed when I saw my five whalebacks all in a row. Panza's report was excellent. They had come around by the Pentland Firth and reached their cruising ground on the fourth day. Already they had destroyed 20 vessels without any mishap. I ordered the Beta to divide her oil and torpedoes among the other three, so that they were in good condition to continue their cruise. Then the Beta and I headed for home, reaching our base upon Sunday, April 25. Off Cape Wrath I picked up a paper from a small schooner.

"Wheat 84, maize 60, barley 62." What were battles and bombardments compared to that!

The whole coast of Norland was closely blockaded by cordon within cordon, and every port, even the smallest, held by the British, but why should they suspect my modest confectioner's villa more than any other of the 10,000 houses that face the sea? I was glad when I picked up its homely white front in my periscope. That night I landed and found my stores intact. Before morning the Beta reported itself, for we have the windows lit as a guide.

It is not for me to recount the messages which I found waiting for me at my humble headquarters. They shall ever remain as the patents of nobility of my family. Among the others was that never-to-be forgotten salutation from my King. He desired me to present myself at Hauptville, but for once I took it upon myself to disobey his command. It took me two days—or rather two nights, for we sank ourselves during the daylight hours—to get all our stores on board, but my presence was needed every minute of the time. On the third morning, at 4 o'clock, the Beta and my own little flagship were at sea once more, bound for our original station off the mouth of the Thames.

I HAD no time to read our papers while I was refitting, but I gathered the news after we got under way. The British occupied all our ports, but otherwise we had not suffered at all, since we have excellent railway communications with Europe. Prices had altered little, and our industries continued as before. There was talk of a British invasion, but this I knew to be absolute nonsense, for the British must have learned by this time that it would be sheer murder to send transports full of soldiers to sea in the face of submarines. When they have a tunnel they can use their fine expeditionary force upon the continent, but until then it might just as well not exist, so far as Europe is concerned. My own country, therefore, was in good case and had nothing to fear. Great Britain, however, was already feeling my grip upon her throat. As in normal times four-fifths of her food is imported, prices were rising by leaps and bounds. The supplies in the country were beginning to show signs of depletion, while little was coming in to replace them. The insurance at Lloyd's had risen to a figure which made the price of food prohibitive to the mass of the people by the time it had reached the market. The loaf, which under ordinary circumstances stood at 5 pence, was already at one shilling twopence. Beef was 3 shillings fourpence a pound, and mutton 2 shillings ninepence. Everything else was in proportion. The Government had acted with energy and offered a big bounty for corn to be planted at once. It could only be reaped five months hence, however, and long before then, as the papers pointed out, half the island would be dead from starvation.

Strong appeals had been made to the patriotism of the people and they were assured that the interference with trade was temporary, and that with a little patience all would be well. But already there was a marked rise in the death rate, especially among children, who suffered from want of milk, the cattle being slaughtered for food. There was serious rioting in the Lanarkshire coal fields and in the Midlands, together with a Socialistic upheaval in the East of London, which had assumed the proportions of a civil war. Already there were responsible papers which declared that England was in an impossible position, and that an immediate peace was necessary to prevent one of the greatest tragedies in history. It was my task now to prove to them that they were right.

IT was May 2 when I found myself back at the Maplin Sands to the north of the estuary of the Thames. The Beta was sent on to the Solent to block it and take the place of the lamented Kappa. And now I was throttling Britain indeed—London, Southampton, the Bristol Channel, Liverpool, the North Channel, the Glasgow approaches each was guarded by my boats. Great liners were, as we learned afterward, pouring their supplies into Galway and the west of Ireland, where provisions were cheaper than had ever been known. Tens of thousands were embarking from Britain for Ireland in order to save themselves from starvation. But you cannot transplant a whole dense population. The main body of the people, by the middle of May, were actually starving. At that date wheat was at a hundred, maize and barley at 80. Even the most obstinate had begun to see that the situation could not possibly continue.

In the great towns starving crowds clamored for bread before the municipal offices, and public officials everywhere were attacked and often murdered by frantic mobs, composed largely of desperate women who had seen their infants perish before their eyes. In the country, roots, bark and weeds of every sort were used as food. In London the private mansions of Ministers were guarded by strong pickets of soldiers, while a battalion of guards was camped permanently round the House of Parliament. The lives of the Prime Minister and of the Foreign Secretary were continualy threatened and occasionally attempted. Yet the Government had entered upon the war with the full assent of every party in the State. The true culprits were those, be they politicians or journalists, who had not the foresight to understand that unless Britain grew her own supplies, or unless by means of a tunnel she had some way of conveying them into the island, all her mighty expenditures upon her army and her fleet was a mere waste of money so long as her antagonist had a few submarines and men who could use them. England has often been stupid, but has got off scot free.

This time she was stupid and had to pay the price. You can't expect luck to be your savior always.

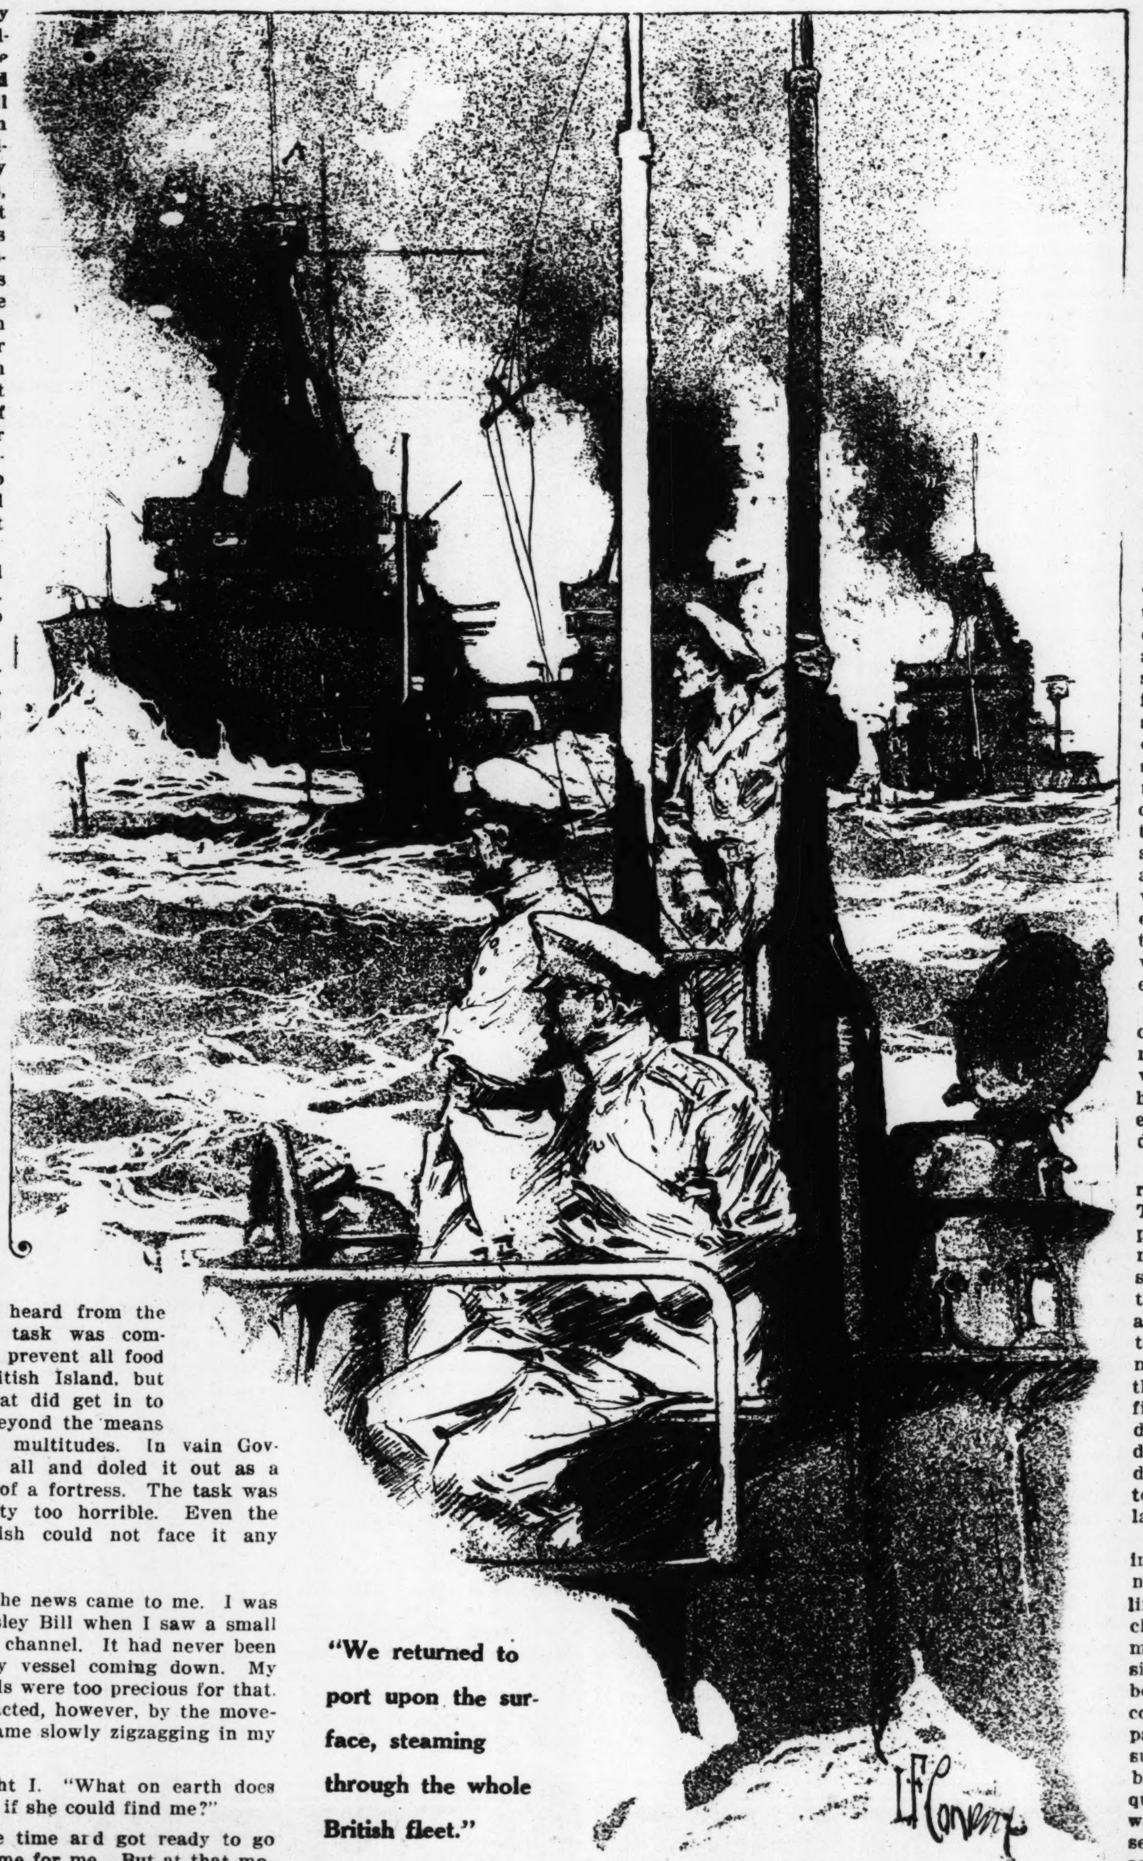
It would be a mere repitition of what I have already described if I were to recount all our proceedings during that first 10 days after I resumed my station. During my absence the ships had taken heart and had begun to come up again. In the first day I got four. After that I had to go farther afield, and again I picked up several in French waters. Once I had a narrow escape through one of my Kingston valves getting some grit into it and refusing to act when I was below the surface. Our margin of bouyancy just carried us through. By the end of the week the channel was clear again, and both Beta and my own boat were down west once more. There we had encouraging messages from our Bristol consort, who in turn had heard from the Delta at Liverpool. Our task was completly done. We could not prevent all food from passing into the British Island, but at least we had raised what did get in to a price which put it far beyond the means of the penniless, workless multitudes. In vain Government commandeered it all and doled it out as a General feeds the garrison of a fortress. The task was too great—the responsibility too horrible. Even the proud and stubborn English could not face it any longer.

I REMEMBER well how the news came to me. I was lying at the time off Sesley Bill when I saw a small war vessel coming down channel. It had never been my policy to attack any vessel coming down. My torpedoes and even my shells were too precious for that. I could not help being attracted, however, by the movements of this ship, which came slowly zigzagging in my direction.

"Looking for me," thought I. "What on earth does the foolish thing hope to do if she could find me?"

I was lying awash at the time and got ready to go below in case she should come for me. But at that moment—she was about half a mile away—she turned her quarter, and there, to my amazement, was the red flag with the blue circle, our own beloved flag, flying from her peak. For a moment I thought that this was some clever dodge of the enemy to tempt me within range. I snatched up my glasses and called on Vornal. Then we both recognized the vessel. It was the Juno, the only one left intact of our own cruisers. What could she be doing flying the flag in the enemy's waters? Then I understood it, and, turning to Vornal, we threw ourselves into each other's arms. It could only mean an armistice—or peace!

And it was peace. We learned the glad news when we had risen alongside the Juno, and the ringing cheers which greeted us had at last died away. Our orders were to report ourselves at once to Blankenberg. Then she passed on down the channel to collect the others. We returned to port upon the surface, steaming through the whole British fleet as we passed up the North Sea. The crews clustered thick along the sides of the vessel to watch us. I can see now their sullen, angry faces. Many shook their fists and cursed us as we went by. It was not that we had damaged them—I will do them the justice to say that the English, as the old Boer War has proved, bear no resentment against a brave enemy—but that they thought us cowardly to attack merchant ships and avoid the warships. It is like the Arabs, who think that a flank attack is a mean, unmanly device. War is not merely a big game, my English friend. It is a desperate business to gain the upper hand, and one must use one's brain in order to find the weak spot of one's enemy. It is not fair to blame me if I have found yours. It was my duty. Perhaps those officers and sailors who scowled at the little Iota that May morning have by this time done me justice, when the first bitterness of undeserved defeat was past.



"We returned to port upon the surface, steaming through the whole British fleet."

Let others describe my entrance into Blankenberg; the mad enthusiasm of the crowds and the magnificent public reception of each successive boat as it arrived. Surely the men deserved the grant made them by the state, which has enabled each of them to be independent for life. As a feat of endurance, that long residence in such a state of mental tension in cramped quarters, breathing an unnatural atmosphere, will long remain as a record. The country may well be proud of such sailors.

THE terms of peace were not made onerous, for we were in no condition to make Great Britain our permanent enemy. We knew well that we had won the war by circumstances which would never be allowed to occur again, and that in a few years the island Power would be as strong as ever—stronger, perhaps—for the lesson that she had learned. It would be madness to provoke such an antagonist. A mutual salute of flags was arranged, the colonial boundary was adjusted by arbitration, and we claimed no indemnity beyond an undertaking on the part of Britain that she would pay any damages which an international court might award to France or to the United States for injury received through the operations of our submarines. So ended the war.

Of course, England will not be caught napping in such a fashion again! Her foolish blindness is partly explained by her delusion that her enemy would not torpedo merchant vessels. Common sense should have told her that her enemy would play the game that suited them best—that they would not inquire what they could do, but they would do it first and talk about it afterward. The opinion of the whole world now is that if a blockade were proclaimed one might do what one could with those who tried to break it, and that it was as reasonable to prevent food from reaching England in war time as it would be for a besieger to prevent the victualizing of a beleaguered fortress.

I cannot end this account better than by quoting the first few paragraphs of a leader in the Times, which appeared shortly after the declaration of peace:

"In all this miserable business," said the writer, "which has cost us the loss of a considerable portion of our merchant fleet, and more than 50,000 civilian lives, there is just one consolation to be found. It lies in the fact that our temporary conqueror is a Power which is not strong enough to reap the fruits of her victory. Had we endured this humiliation at the hands of any of the first-class Powers, it would certainly have entailed the los of all our crown coloni and tropical possessions, b sides the payment of huge indemnity. We were absolutely at the feet of our conqueror, and had no possible alternative but to submit to her terms, however onerous. Norland has had the good sense to understand that she must not abuse her temporary advantage, and has been generous in her dealings. In the grip of any other Power we should have ceased to exist as an empire.

"Even now we are not out of the wood. Someone may maliciously pick a quarrel with us before we get our house in order, and use the easy weapon which has been demonstrated.

"Already the lines of our reconstruction are evident. The first and most important is that our party men realize that there is something more vital than their academic disputes about free trade or protection, and that all theory must give way to the fact that a country is in an artificial and dangerous condition if she does not produce within her own borders sufficient food at least to keep life in her population.

"The second lesson is the immediate construction of not one but two double-line railways under the channel. On this point we must reverse our position, since the project has always been discouraged in these columns, but we are prepared to admit that, had such railway communication been combined with adequate arrangements for forwarding supplies from Marseilles, we should have avoided our recent surrender.

"As to the building of large fleets of merchant submarines for the carriage of food, that is a new departure which will be an additional insurance against the danger which has left so dark a page in the history of our country."

THE END.

America, the Melting Pot.

THE extent to which this country is the "melting pot" into which enter representatives of all nations is indicated anew now that the old world is aflame with strife. A fair sample is presented by the anthracite region of Pennsylvania, where hosts of laborers who came from Europe are employed. A mining company reports that last year it carried on its payrolls more than 12,000 men; among the number were the following: Russians, 6284; Poles, 2141; Tyroleans, 1165; Austrians, 805; Lithuanians, 751; Italians, 599; Slavs, 522; Hungarians, 247; Greeks, 104 with some native or naturalized Americans.

COME AND SPEND A DAY ON THE MOON

If you have a gun shooting a projectile 7 1-2 miles a second, can stand a variation of 580 degrees of heat between midday and midnight and can live without air, or even oxygen, you may see lunar wonders at close range . . .

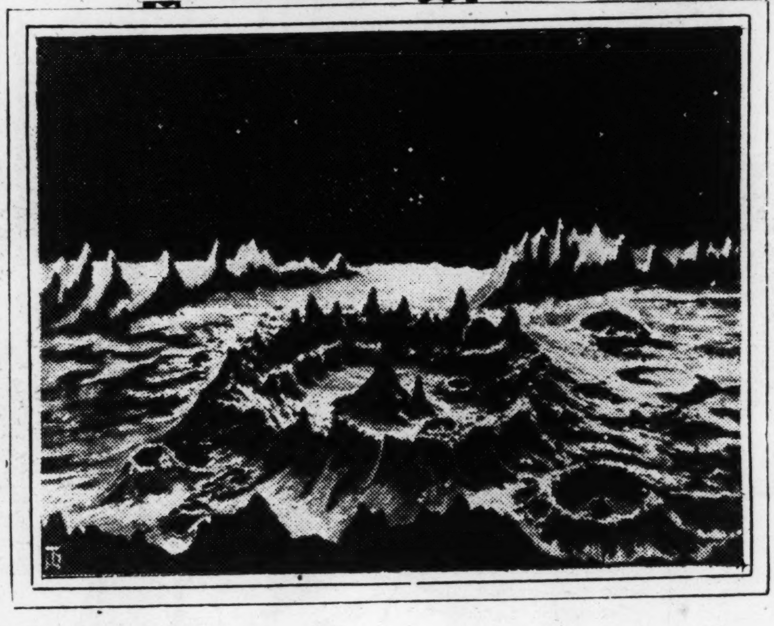
THE EARTH AS SEEN FROM THE MOON.

EVER since the days of Baron Munchausen—long before then, in fact—romancers have been leading their readers on expeditions to the moon. The travelers have discovered some amazing things there, including a population which wore its heads under its arms, and occasionally, for want of a better missile, threw them at an offending brother. Scientists have not infrequently availed themselves of this kind of day-dreaming and have utilized it to teach vividly their own theories of the chemistry, physics and topography of the satellite.

The newest of these is Abbe Moreux, a brilliant Frenchman, who has written "A Day on the Moon" (Stokes). Although the Abbe punctures with the cold, reasoning of science most of our fantastic ideas about the moon, he does it to lead us into an even more wonderful world than the fictionist has ever contrived to imagine.

No astral creatures play football with their crania, but there are skies sparkling with incomparable splendor, chameleon-hued dawns, opalescent horizons. There are torrid days two weeks long and nights of equal length when the cold is so intense that nothing earth born could survive it. Even our cherished lunar volcano is declared a myth, but while robbing us of this, the amiable Abbe consoles with circular plains of astounding breadth, ringed with stone walls of stupendous height.



From a drawing by the Abbe Moreux.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW OF A LUNAR MOUNTAIN-RING.

One of the very best things about the book is that we don't have to be grounded in astronomy to understand it. Very cheerfully and simply the Abbe leads us over the stony fields of triangulations, perihelions, headache-making problems of mass and density, mazes of logarithms, algebraic complexities and all the rest of it. Many of us don't know a perihelion from a rhododendron and are proud of it. Instead of being ashamed for us and patronizing us, the author is content to slip us the necessary technical information in hypodermic doses. That is, we don't realize what a lot we really are learning until after it is all learned.

Although he takes us along with him to the moon, he doesn't let us worry how we are going to get there and doubly worry how we are going to get back. All we have to do, we are told, is to find how to suppress or even diminish the force of gravitation; how we are to breathe and keep from freezing to death from the time we get ten or twelve miles off the earth: how we are to build some kind of aeroplane that will cover the 238,833 miles in 160 days, loaf around the satellite a week or so and then bring us back; how we are to survive the lunar nights, some 380 degrees below zero and the lunar days, when it is 212 above. We just assume that all these obstacles are overcome. It is very simple.

The Abbe assures us that this will not be a tremendous strain on the imagination. He points out that on the day when man has invented an explosive that will give a shell an initial velocity of seven and one-half miles a second, it will be as easy to bombard Mount Copernicus on the moon as it was for the Germans to bombard Antwerp after they had occupied the outer forts. One of these shells, carrying a letter, properly aimed and fired from St. Louis at 6 a. m., would reach a lunar postoffice at 3 in the afternoon of the same day, a mail service that would be about as rapid as the one we have between St. Louis and Kansas City. Mr. Jules Verne couldn't do any better than that when his imagination was in its best working order.

As everybody, who has given the matter any careful study knows, only a fraction more than half of the moon is visible from the earth, ever has been visible or ever will be. Why this is, the Abbe gives a very convincing explanation. Suppose, he says, you put a candle in the center of a circular table. Then suppose you walk around the table, always keeping your eye on the candle. You have completed an entire circle around it, yet a ray of light from it has never touched the back of your head. If, for the candle, you substitute the earth, and if, for yourself, you substitute the moon, you can understand why it is that while the moon has been revolving around the earth for countless centuries, only one side of the moon has been visible from the earth. This side is rather more than half the moon's surface, as we are enabled to get a glimpse of a very little beyond each the north and the south poles.

Men have been studying the visible face of the moon ever since there have been men on earth. Modern inventions and particularly the telescope have made it possible to study the exposed surface in comparative detail. Under the most powerful of these instruments, it would be possible to see anything so large as one of the great pyramids; it would even be possible to see a regiment of men marching in close order. Thus far the most powerful instruments have failed to disclose the slightest evidences of any civilization. Similarly, it is possible for scientists to declare that there are never any clouds or aerial movements about the surface of the satellite, and this leads to the obvious conclusion that there is no air, such as we know on the earth. The deduction is that since there is no air, and no oxygen, there can be no living being or no plant. Hence the moon, as Moreux understands it, has not now and has not had for centuries any form of animal or vegetable life.

Such, then, is the planet we are approaching in our imagined aeroplane, with the worthy Abbe at the steering wheel. At a little over 8000 miles, a distance equal to about the diameter of the earth, the globe we have left would occupy about 40 degrees of the heavens. As we progress to three, four, five diameters, the earth steadily diminishes in apparent size. At 10 times this distance it is still the most wonderful object in the sky, with an apparent surface 100 times greater than that of the moon as seen from the earth. At the same time the apparent size of the moon has been steadily increasing. If we are only maintaining the 62 1-2 miles an hour any first-class present-day aviator can make, we shall reach the moon in 160 days.

It is night when we land on the moon. "The sky sparkles with incomparable splendor," to quote the Abbe's words. Not even the glories of a tropical night can give any idea of what night on the moon will be. But soon the sun will appear. There is no dawn to herald it, but already there is arising in the east a long, spindle-shape trail of whiteness—it is the zodiacal light, 10 times more brilliant than with us.

"For hours this false dawn rises higher in the sky; its tints of phosphorescent colors are brighter and brighter from the summit to the base; in the midst of the enormous cone, all aglow with green and opal, there gleams a resplendent star: it is the beautiful Venus, hardly recognizable amid its mantle of light.

"Already the fine rays of the sun's corona are heralding the day star. For a few minutes the cromosphere is in sight, marking with a red glow the summits of the high mountain peaks. Then all of a sudden the blue rays of light, so strong that the eye cannot endure them, dart from the distant horizon. And now on all sides isles of brightness seem to rise up around us as the summits catch the sunlight. We have arrived."

We have landed at a place, the Abbe informs us, where an aerial perspective is unknown because there is no atmosphere to reflect and modify the light beams. We are standing in a fierce glare such as we do not know on the earth. We are looking down on the summits of a vast circuit of heights, nearly hexagonal. We are watching the dawn of the lunar day from the lofty ramparts of the "crater," known to astronomers as Copernicus.

The "crater" is an enormous circle of 50 miles in diameter, easily discovered by telescope from the earth and formerly supposed to be the crater of a lunar vol-

VIII. "ALL BETS ARE OFF."

SYNOPSIS

LIEUT. FORBES, U. S. A., back from the Philippines, sees New York after many years' absence and it goes to his head. He follows, by means of a Fifth avenue bus, a motor car containing a lady who fascinates him, although he does not see her face. That night at a theater Murray Ten Eyck introduces him to Persis Cabot and he learns she is the lady he followed. Her party adopt him and teach him to tango. In 24 hours he is deeply in love with Persis, who seems to be engaged to Willie Enslee, principally because Willie is rich and the elder Cabot is losing his footing in Wall street. Willie Enslee decides to go to his place in the country. Persis, Forbes and all the others go with him, a thoroughly unconventional house party. Persis meets Forbes in the garden at night and he proposes. Someone sees them returning to their rooms, but Forbes does not know who it is. The party goes to a country club and Forbes meets his father's friend, Senator Tait, who tries to prevent him saving Persis when her horse bolts.

PERSIS met equine wrath with female rage. Even the old man, who lay on the ground clutching at his heart, could not but feel a thrill at the wild beauty of the girl; her long hair flowed and writhed smokily, her face was the more commandingly beautiful for the very merciless hate that fired it; her girlish body in her boyish costume was strangely alive. Her thighs gripped the horse's sides visibly like arches of steel. All this beauty Forbes saw also, and more, for he saw with the eyes of idolatry; and yet more again, for his beloved was in mortal danger. He ran in a frenzy of fear and determination. As he and the horses met on their converging paths Persis shrieked to him: "Keep away! Keep away!"

None the less he leaped for the bridle with both hands flung out. But she would not let him endanger himself. She threw all the power of both her arms and her weight on the farther bridle, dragging the horse's head aside till he swerved out of Forbes' reach.

Forbes sprawled on the turf; but at least he had not been struck by the hoofs or knees of the horse. And then the horse came down in turn, thrown out of his stride and with his head brought round so sharply that he came down on his shoulder and almost broke his neck.

Persis went through the air like a pinwheel, and those who witnessed the affair gave up her and the horse for dead. But she clung to the bridle, and got up on all fours. For once Persis was awkward. She and Forbes met and stared like quadrupeds, and the horse rolled over on his belly and stared too.

Willie, meanwhile, had vanished over the hill like the headless horseman Ten Eyck had likened him to.

After the first automatic recovery, Persis was overtaken by a wave of terror she had had no time to feel. She turned ashen about the mouth, and a queasy feeling sickened her. Her elbows gave way and she sank to the ground.

Senator Tait came up with difficulty, forgetting that he had been, perhaps, nearer death on that green battlefield than any other of the fallen. He heard Forbes wailing, as he gathered Persis into his arms and strengthened his own weak knees:

"Persis, my darling, my angel, speak to me! Are you dead?"

Persis opened her eyes with a flash. She began to realize she had been very conspicuous. "Of course I'm not dead. But what's worse, my hair's down. I must be a sight! And my breeches are torn. Oh, Lord, why wasn't I killed romantically? Turn your backs at once."

The two men stared all the more, but she released herself from Forbes' arms, rose to her feet with some twinges of evident pain, and put up her hair with what few hairpins remained of her store, and borrowed a pin from the Senator's lapel to mend a rip that let one exquisite knee escape to view. A caddy came running up with her hat, and she thanked him.

"Come along," she said; "I feel as if I were on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House."

The horse got clumsily to his feet, all the battle knocked out of him, and followed weakly till she handed him over to a groom.

Eager to escape the stares that met her and the sympathy and felicitations that greeted her, she walked so rapidly that the Senator dropped back. She found herself alone with Forbes, and she murmured:

"You were wonderful to try to save me as you did."

"As I didn't,' he groaned. "You wouldn't let me."

"No, I don't want you ever to risk anything for me, Harvey. But I'm just as grateful—and more than that. If there weren't so many people looking on do you know what I'd say?"

"What?"

"Kiss me." The words came so unexpectedly that he forgot their subjunctive mode. He took them to be in the imperative, and came near obeying. He checked himself in time, and said:

"How soon shall I be able to call you mine before all the world?"

"Do you wish that?"

"Madly! It is my one great wish."

She breathed deeply and caressed him with a delicious smile and murmured:

"It is mine, too."

And then Ten Eyck and Winifred and Mrs. Neff and Alice, and others of her acquaintance, crowded round, summoned by the flying rumor of the incident. At length someone exclaimed:

"But where's Willie?"

"Good Lord," Persis gasped, "I forgot all about him."

By the time Persis had reached the clubhouse and had undergone the ministrations of a maid, who was also a seamstress, Willie came limping up on the terrace, where Persis was seated with the others.

The luncheon, which Ten Eyck had commanded, was announced just then, and they all adjourned to the dining room. Suddenly, in his joy of being near to Persis, Forbes remembered that he had neglected Senator Tait, after promising to meet his daughter. He did not venture to leave his own table; but as soon as the luncheon was eaten, and while Winifred and Mrs. Neff and Persis sneaked off somewhere for their after-coffee cigarettes, he sought out Tait and found him with a tall and self-reliant girl whom he introduced as Mildred.

Forbes was ashamed of himself for feeling a little chilled by Mildred's irrepressible enthusiasm. He blamed himself, not her. But when Persis returned he thanked heaven for beauty untroubled by any deeper concerns than its own loveliness, and for a heart that inspired desire for itself rather than pity for the submerged myriads.

He bade the Senator and his daughter as cordial a good-by as he could, and promised to meet the Senator as soon as possible in town. Then he forgot them both, for when Enslee's automobile swept up to the clubhouse door, Enslee's two horses were also brought up, and he imagined Persis riding away again on that dangerous beast with that dangerous escort.

Enslee stared at the horses in disgust. When he said, "Hop into the car, Persis; I'll send a groom over for the nags," Persis shook her head, and answered:

"I propose to show my horse who is master. He can't spill me all over the landscape and get away with it. You ride home in the car, and I'll go back as I came."

"And a pretty fool you'll make of me," Enslee wrangled. "Besides, I haven't ridden much lately; I'm saddle sore."

"I've been riding every morning in the park," Persis insisted. "I'll lead your horse back, unless"——She hesitated and looked at Forbes, who leaped at the cue.

"I'd be glad to ride him, if you don't object, Mr. Enslee."

Enslee stared at Forbes, saw nothing ulterior in his eyes, and yielded with a bad grace.

And so they mounted. Persis' horse was humbled beyond struggle; but Enslee's big black had lately tossed his rider over his head. He tested the seat of his new visitor. Forbes was a West Pointer, a cavalryman, and the horse had not made more than one pirouette before he understood that he was bestridden by one whom it were best to obey.

Willie tried at first to keep the motor back with the horses, but Persis ordered him to go about his business, and turned off the hard track to a soft road.

And now at last they were free, Forbes and Persis, cantering along a plushy road, a lovers' lane that mounted up and up till they paused at the height to give the horses breath.

"Is it possible that we're actually alone?" Forbes gloated, turning in his saddle to take her in in her brisk, youthful beauty.

"I shouldn't exactly call it alone, up here on the mantlepiece of the world, in broad daylight," Persis smiled. "But it's nice, isn't it?"

"Wonderful, to be riding with you!"

"I'm immensely happy," she said. "Even the horses know the difference. You ride splendidly, don't you?"

"Do I?" he said. "As you told me the first time I met you, I'm glad you like me."

"I more than that, now."

"More than like me?"

"Umm-humm!"

"Love me?"

"Umm-humm!"

"If I could only brush away all of these houses and people and take you in my arms! If this were only a Sahara or Mojave!"

"Sometimes I think I'd love to live on a desert island. Couldn't you buy me a desert island somwhere—a thoroughly equipped desert island, with hot and cold water and automatic cooking?"

"I'll see if there's one in the market."

"It would be a fine addition to the same old town and country houses and yacht. Had you thought where you will have your—our country place?"

"Er—no, I hadn't."

His heart was thumping. She grew more exquisite as she grew more fairylike in her visions. He could not tell her the truth—not yet—not, at least, till they had passed through the woods ahead, where there was a promise of opportunity for at least a moment's embrace, at least one hasty kiss.

They jogged along in silence awhile, she pondering like a solemn child, he longing to give her the toys she kept imagining. They drew into the thicket, shady and soft with breeze that wandered about murmuring "Woo! woo!" and leaves that whispered "Kiss! kiss!! and a deep forest voice that mumbled "Love!"

No one was visible ahead. He turned and stared back. They were shut in by a projecting hill that seemed to close after them like a door. He leaned sidewise with arm outstretched to enfold her waist. But with a quick lift of her hand a scratch of the spur she carried her horse aside and ahead.

"You mustn't!" she warned. "Really!"

"And you won't let me kiss you now?"

"But we couldn't go spooning about in the daylight, could we? Not even if we were an old married couple, could we?"

"I suppose not. But when—when are we going to be an old married couple?"

"Whenever you say," she said, with a shy down-look. "We'd have to announce our engagement, I suppose, and then it would take a long time to get my clothes made."

"Would it?"

"Yes. I haven't a thing. I'm in perfect rags. And besides, a bride ought to begin new. Isn't it thrilling to be talking of such things! Am I blushing as red as I feel?"

"You're a rose on fire."

"I feel deliciously a ninny. Can you get away from your hateful army for a good long honeymoon, do you suppose?"

"I don't know."

"Oh, well, it doesn't matter so long as we are together, does it?"

"Do you feel that way?" he asked, hungrily..

"Terribly. I love you—I love you hideously much. Watch out! Will you never learn that somebody's always looking?—a whole picnic this time."

They were nearing Pocantico Lake. In a thicket on its shores a wagon load of villagers had finished its basket lunch and scattered in a rather dreary effort at inexpensive happiness.

As Forbes and Persis rounded the turn that disclosed the revelers a homely couple, evidently in search of a less populous nook, severed a highly unromantic looking clasp. It was hard to see how either took much pleasure from the other. The man was in his shirtsleeves, with his hat askew; the girl, shapeless and freckled, in a shapeless, freckled dress. They squinted their eyes against the sun, gaped at the tailor-made couple on the varnished horses, and stumbled in the roadside gully to let them pass.

"Isn't it ghastly?" Persis whispered. "They were trying to spoon—just as we were. And we both broke up both of us. It makes love rather a silly, shabby spectacle, doesn't it?"

"I don't think so," Forbes said. "I should say that instead of their making love shabby, love covered them with a little glory."

"That's a much prettier way to put it. But shabby people—oh Lord! Look at that family, dear! If that's wedded bliss, give me chloroform."

As they rode on she shuddered. "What an odious thing to be like that! Suppose you lost your job in the army and we got very poor, and I had to take in washing, and we had a lot of children; should we be like that, do you think?—should we?"

"You could never be anything that was not beautiful!" Forbes exclaimed, partly because he believed it to be unquestionable truth and partly to quell her ferocious repugnance for anything that was ugly and tawdry.

By and by they came to a grass-matted road that lost itself in ferns and undergrowth. Forbes looked at Persis. Her eyes consented. He laid his bridle hand on the left side of his horse's mane and shifted his weight a trifle. And his horse shouldered hers into the jungle. Heads bent low, the horses mounted with cautious hoofs till the ferns were brushing their saddle girths. The prattle of a brook somewhere lured them farther, and they pressed on into a fog of leaves and crackling boughs and flowers. Birds cried warnings and shot through the branches, bearing news of the invasion. Others in sentimental oblivion did not budge, but sat still and went on sawing the air with silver phrases shrilly sweet.

Suddenly the brook was visible, rushing here and there through the woods and making noises that were rapture just to hear. And with that music of water and woods, and that multitudinous beauty about them, they gazed only into each other's eyes, inclined together and locked arms and breasts and lips in close embrace. They clung together till the soulless horses, nibbling here and there, sundered them.

And then they slid from the saddles and, slipping the bridles to their elbows, walked on with arms about each other's bodies and eyes so mutually engaged that they stumbled like blind folk. At last she sank to the ground at the edge of the brook, and he, instead of helping her up, dropped down at her side.

He took her into his arms again and kissed her and laughed at her.

She knelt above the water-glass, and he bent over to gaze. He saw her looking up at him, and his own image looking up close to hers. They smiled and made faces like children. And when he rubbed his cheek against hers the images imitated the foolishness.

"See, they're mocking us," she cried. A little breeze wrinkled the mirror, and she cried: "They're frowning! They want us to be sensible! Come along! They'll be missing us at home."

"At home?" he echoed, reprovingly.

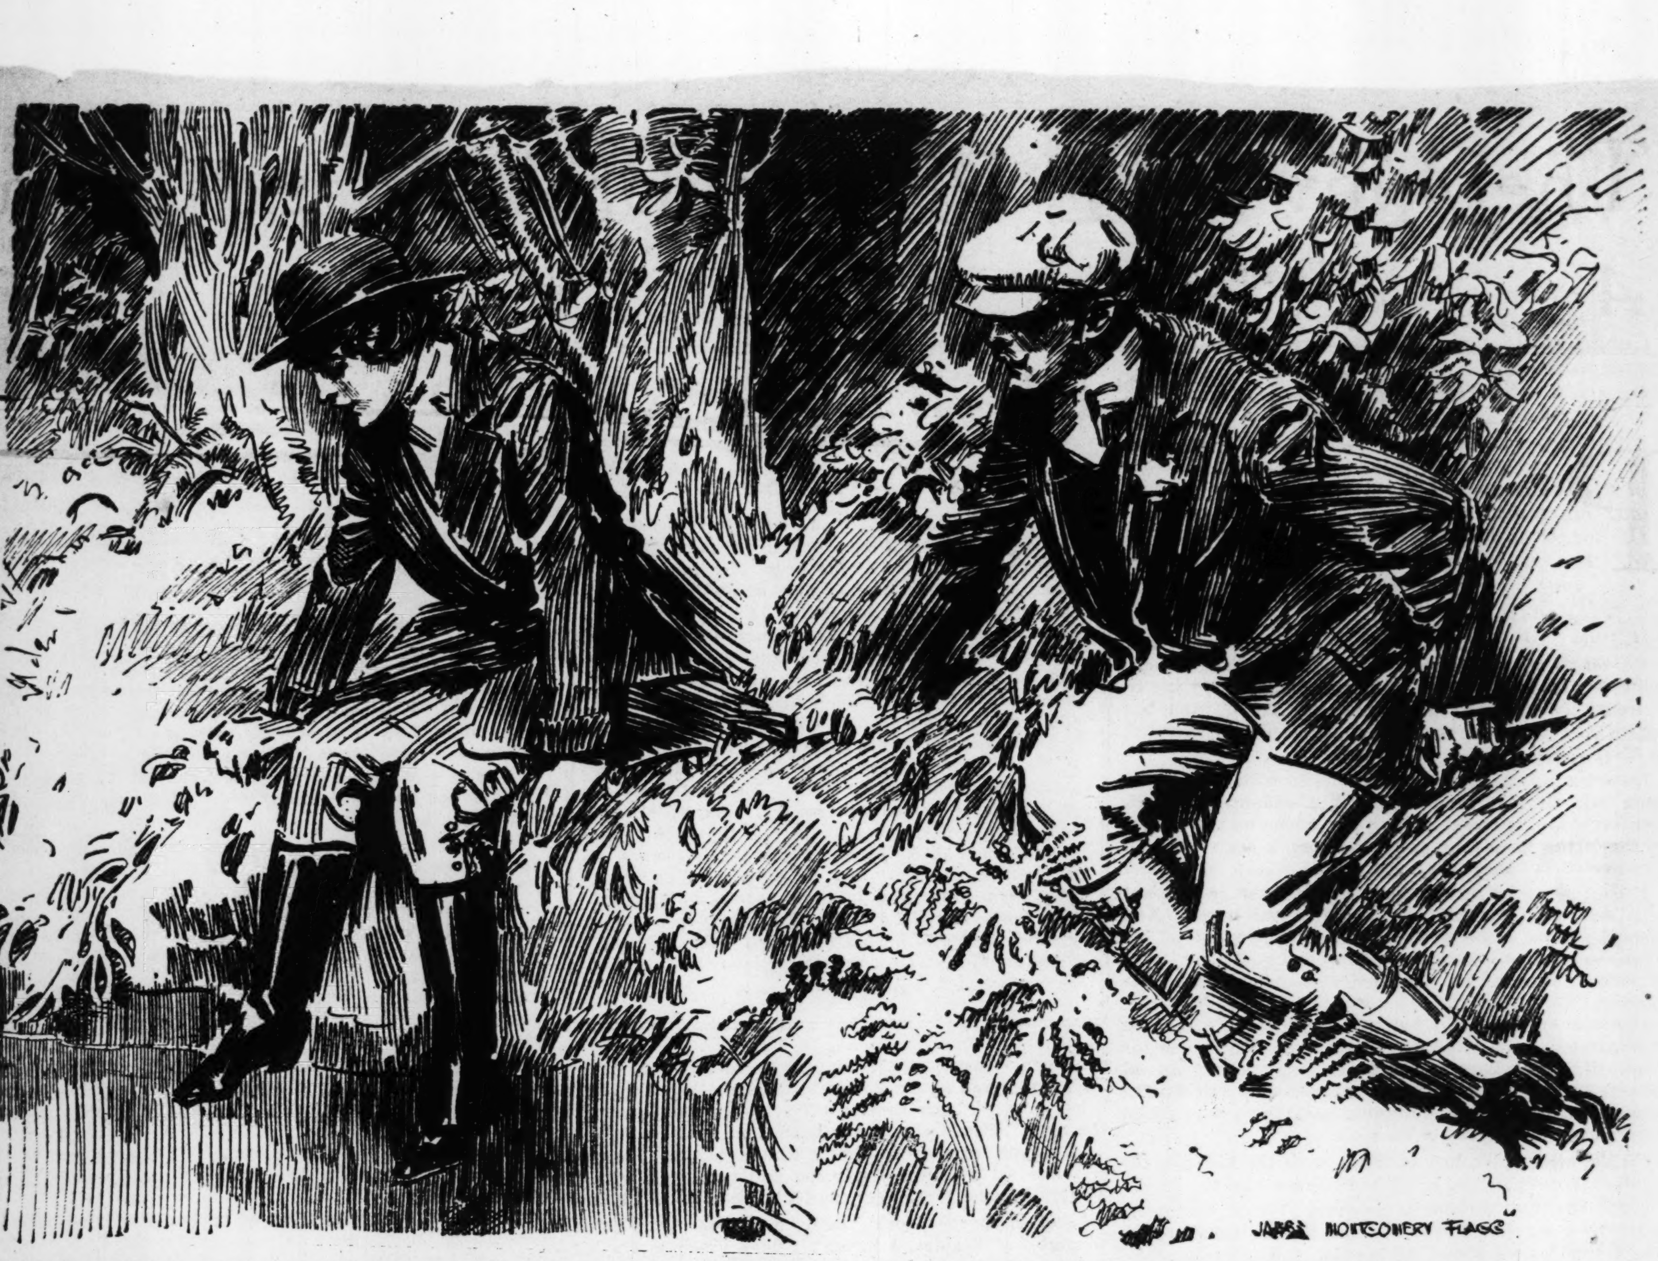
"At Willie's, I mean," she corrected. And then she put his hands away and spoke earnestly. "It came mighty near being home to me. I have a confession to make. I ought to have made it before. I have been amazed at myself for not telling you, for taking your love when I had no right to."

He stared at her in terror, and she smiled with pride at his fear and babbled on almost incoherently.

"Don't be afraid—though I'm glad you are. But I hope you won't despise me. But I couldn't seem to help myself. You're really to blame for being so terribly overwhelming. You see, I—I—I've told you how often Willie Enslee proposed to me, and—well, one day—that very day you saw me in my old hat—the first time, you know—well, I had just had a talk with my father, and the poor old boy was all cut up about his—his money matters. He's too nice and sweet to be much of a financier, you know, and—well, I was scared to death, and I thought the world was coming to an end, and I'd better—better get aboard the ark, you know—and I hadn't met you then, you know, and Willie proposed again, and I—I accepted him."

"You promised to be his wife!" Forbes whispered, chokingly.

"Yes," she answered. "I—you see, I didn't know you. I didn't dream I should ever meet anybody who would—would thrill me—that's the only word—as you did, as you do. I didn't imagine that I should ever love as other people do—insanely, madly, dishonorably—anythingly to be with the one I loved. And I didn't dare give Willie up till I was sure I loved you. I—it seemed



"At last she sank to the ground at the edge of the brook and he, instead of helping her up, dropped down at her side."

too hateful even to mention his name. It would have been like—like this."

With her heel she pushed a rock into the water, and it thumped and splashed and curdled the little pool.

"That's the effect his name would have had on our moonlight, and I couldn't tell you then. Will you forgive me, or do you think I'm a hopeless rotter and a sneak?"

He smiled at her mixed vocabulary, and gathered her into his arms. "My love! My Persis! But you'll tell him now, won't you?"

"Oh, now, yes!" she cried, ecstatic as a comforted child. "You are glorious to forgive me so easily, and not be nastly and lecture-y. And see the pool; it's all smooth and clear again."

He looked and held back the confession he was about to make in his turn. The mention of his poverty would be pushing another rock into the pool. And he wondered if the mirror would clear after that. He could forgive her betrothal to Enslee, because that was of the past; but the lack of money was not a matter for forgiving and forgetting; it was something to endure. It was asking love to accept poverty as a concubine or a mother-in-law.

He kept silent on that score, and they murmured their loves and kissed and laughed with contentedness purling through their hearts, and the world far away. She glanced back at the horses blissfully tearing young leaves from high branches.

"We ought to keep those horses as a souvenir of our engagement. It would be a pity to let anyone else ride the dear old brutes, wouldn't it?"

"It would, indeed!" he said.

"Let's buy them from Willie. He would sell them for a song."

"That's a fine idea," Forbes answered with a gulp. He knew how much horses like these were worth—and saddles, bridles and stables.

"We shouldn't want to ride in a car all the time, should we?" she asked.

He made no answer. She turned and looked at him and saw on his face the look she had seen on her father's that day—the look a man wears when he cannot buy his beloved what she pleads for. Now, as then, Persis felt ashamed, rather than resentful, and she hastened to add:

"If you can't afford it, old boy, say so. You mustn't mind me. My father says I'm a terrible asker. Just say no, and I won't mind. Promise me that, dear."

Experience and common sense—for he had them in large measure in his ordinary life—seemed to bend down and say: "Let your seagull go. She'll die in your cage, or she'll break it apart."

But she was in his arms. She was leaning against him, flicking his boots with her riding crop, and loving him, contented utterly. Romance elbowed Reason aside and said. "See how happy she is. It isn't money that makes happiness. You're sitting on the edge of a silly little brook in somebody's backwoods, and you're happy as a king and queen on a throne of gold."

Reason and Romance wrangled in his head while she was babbling something in her elfin economy about "We won't have two cars yet, just one, a nice big 1914 six, with my chauffeur to run it. Father pays him fifteen hundred a year, and that's good pay. Don't you let him wheedle you out of a penny more."

Forbes' heart cried aloud within him: "My God, her very chauffeur gets nearly as much as I do!" This was the spark of resentment that gave him his start. He spoke bitterly, almost glad that she was dazed. And he put her away from him that both might be free. And he savagely kicked a rock into the smiling little pool and watched it grow turbid as he poured out his confession.

"Listen, honey; you've got a wrong idea of my situation. I'm to blame for it, I reckon. I've been meaning to speak about it, but didn't—for just the same reason that kept you quiet about Enslee. I'm not rich, honey. I didn't tell anybody I was rich, but the idea got started from Ten Eyck's fool joke about seeing me coming out of a big bank. I told him the truth, and now I must tell you. You'll hate me, but you've got to know some time. I'm not rich, honey."

"What of it dear?" she said, creeping toward him. "I love you for yourself. I never thought you were rich like Willie. I gave up all that gladly."

"But I'm what you would call a pauper, I suppose. I have only my army pay."

"Isn't that enough?"

"Plenty of couples seem to be happy on it, but they're mostly the sons and daughters of army people. You've been brought up so differently. Wild extravagances for our people would be shabby makeshifts to you."

"Don't you think I'd be able to adapt myself?"

"Would you?"

"I should hope so. How much is your army pay, if you don't mind my asking?"

"As First Lieutenant, I get a little over two thousand."

"Two thousand a week? Why, that's not bad at all. Why did you frighten me?"

He laughed aloud, and she corrected herself.

"Oh, two thousand a month. That's about twenty-five thousand a year. It isn't much, is it? But we could skim and scrape, and we'd have each other."

She had given him his deathblow unwittingly.

He smiled dismally, and groaned:

"Two thousand a year with forage."

She stared at him in unbelief. "Two thousand a year with forage! We couldn't eat the forage, could we? They give you a pittance like that for being an officer and a gentleman and a hero?"

"The hero business is the worst paid of all. Look at the firemen."

"But my dear, two thousand a—why, our chef gets more than that, and our chauffeur nearly as much, and my father's secretary—everybody gets more than that."

She put out her hand and caressed his brow. "Poor boy, it's cruel, it's hateful! Willie Enslee with all that money, and you with two thousand a year! And no prospects for more?"

"Well, I hope to be promoted Captain very shortly—any day now I should get my commission. That carries with it twenty-four hundred a year."

She sighed. "The little car I wanted would cost more than that. Well, let it go. Walking is healthier. It would save the chauffeur's wages, too. And my maid—I don't know what Nichette would say. But—well, let her go. Let everything go but you."

She clapsd her arms round him, and he clutched her tight; but his embrace was like a farewell. She was infinitely pathetic to him. She had so much sophistication, and was so innocent of so much. She kissed him tenderly, but her mood was an elegy.

He lifted her gauntleted hand to his cheek and said nothing. She was silent a long while. Then she pondered aloud: "I wonder what sort of a poor man's wife I'll make. I'm afraid I'll be an awful failure. You know, we were poor once—yes. My father got squeezed in a corner, and nearly went bankrupt. Oh, but mother and I had to skimp and scrape! I had to turn my old gowns, give up our box at the opera, sell my saddle horses. We couldn't go to dinners or receptions because we couldn't return them. We sat at home and received—indignant creditors. Oh, the bills, the bills—my God, the bills!

"At the end of a year father found a man who was unbusinesslike enough to put him on his feet again. It was Willie Enslee, of course. We had money once more; we could hold our heads high, snub those who snubbed us, get even with those who had patronized us, or—ugh! insulted us with their sympathy. Oh, money is a great thing, isn't it? It was like coming out of a cave into the sunlight. I used to say I would face anything rather than poverty again.

"And think of it, Harvey, when we were at our poorest we were spending thirty or forty thousand a year. And we called it poverty. But you and I—two thousand a year—and forage!"

She put his arms away as if they irked her and hampered her breath. She was breathing hard. Merely to imagine a life devoid of everything she had always found about her was like a suffocation. She was understanding how a fish must feel when it is drawn from the water and flung to stifle on dry pebbles. She suffered such dismay as overwhelms a rat in the bell of an air pump when the experimenter begins to create a vacuum.

She was silent for a long while. Forbes longingly set his arms about her; but she did not respond; her hands were idly rolling her riding crop up and down the shin of her boot, for she was thinking hard.

Forbes felt that he clung to the mere clothes of her soul. Herself was already gone from him. Yet he loved her so that he found her not unworthy nor selfish nor craven, but infinitely precious and beautiful, difficult to win and wear.

A great many shining throngs of water went down the brook, making all the conversation there was, before Persis began to flog her boots with her riding crop. She wanted to groan, but as was her custom in torment, smiled instead; and, having something of tragic solemnity to utter, put it forth with a plucky flippancy:

"Well, old boy, I'm afraid all bets are off."

Forbes had been recruiting strength to tell her that he released her; but she anticipated him by jilting him first—and in sporting terms. He stared at her, but he could not see the tears raining down in her heart. He heard her, but was deaf to the immense regret in the little words she added:

"You're pretty poor, aren't you?"

His forehead was drenched with red shame at such comment from her. She could see how she had hurt his pride, and she put on the solemnity he expected her to wear.

"Oh, don't misunderstand me, Harvey. I implore you! I love you all the more for being just your glorious self. You've paid me the greatest honor I ever had—or shall have. You asked me to be your wife, and you are willing to divide up your pitiful little income with me. You'd give it all to me. You'd run into debt till you smothered. But it wouldn't work out. Mother was right: 'People can do without love easier than without money.'"

"Not people with hearts like yours," he ventured at last to put in as a feeble objection.

"Oh, I'm afraid of this heart of mine," she answered. "If it had any sense it wouldn't have fallen in love with you—you of all men. I knew you weren't really terribly rich, but I didn't think you were so pitifully, cruelly poor."

The epithet reiterated stung him like a whip in the face. He protested impatiently:

"I'm not really poor. Army officers have many ways of saving expenses. I might not give you princely luxuries, Persis, but I'd make your life happy."

His resistance gave her something to fight, and her resentment at fate welcomed it.

"Me, happy at an army post? With nothing but poker for you and gossip for me? No, thank you!"

She caught a twitch of anger in his brows, and she grew harsher:

"Look here! Would you give up your career for me?"

"A woman can't ask a man to give up his career," he answered; and she retorted with the spirit of her time:

"Then why should she give up hers for him?"

He looked an old-fashion surprise. "And have you a career?"

"Of course I have. Every woman has; and nowadays a woman has got to look out for herself and her future, or she'll get left at the post."

"And what career have you?" he asked, amazed.

"Marriage. It's the average woman's business in life, Harvey. If she fails in that she fails in everything."

He cried out against this as a libel. "Oh, Persis, don't

The New Pope as Son, Brother and Man

Benedict XV, Known at Home as Don Giacomo Della Chiesa, Is 60 Years Old, an Aristocrat of Historic Lineage, Encyclopaedic in Tastes, Modernist in Affiliations, Diplomatic and Devout. ◆ Was Under Secretary to Cardinal Rampolla, and Archbishop of Bologna, but Became a Cardinal Only Last May—Some Intimate Personal Anecdotes of His Boyhood on the Italian Riviera. ⁂ ⁂ ⁂

ALL the world has been asking: What manner of man is the new Pope? Cardinal Della Chiesa was comparatively unknown in America when he was elected to the Chair of St. Peter, consequently the biographies printed at the time were brief. As soon as Benedict XV was elected the Sunday Post-Dispatch cabled to Rome for all the material available. This was collected for it by a priest who has intimate relations with the Vatican. From this, together with the biographies and interviews that appeared in the newspapers of Rome, Bologna, Genoa, Milan and other cities where Monsignore Della Chiesa is best known, the following was compiled. It is the first intimate account of the new Pope to be printed in America.

By ARTHUR BENINGTON.

FROM the balcony of an ancient but modest palace in the village of Pegli, on the Italian Riviera, on the eve of the feast of Santa Rosalia, an old servant hung out a white and yellow flag, with the triple tiara and the crossed keys emblazoned upon it. On the wall beside it he fastened an old and weather-worn escutcheon surmounted by a marquis's coronet.

Thus was announced to his native town the news that Don Giacomo Della Chiesa had been elected to the most exalted position to which a man can aspire.

Pegli was almost deserted. Usually in September it is thronged with visitors staying there for the sea bathing. But this year the war has kept them away. A group of reporters arriving from Genoa in a motor car were held up by the daziere, the officer of the village custom house, who gravely inspected their automobile.

"So you are reporters?" he says, when they asked the way to the Palazzo Della Chiesa. "Tell your readers that we all love Monsignore. We have seen him close, too: we have talked with him. He has always been so kind to us."

Antonio Roncallo, a bystander, offers to act as guide. They find room for him in the car and he bubbles over with enthusiasm for the new Pope.

"We were expecting him tomorrow for the festa of Santa Rosalia. Now he will not come. They have made him Pope. He always came in past years. He used to preach so well! He talks nicely. And he was so good!"

A flag is flying from the lightning rod that tops the campanile of the Church of the Immaculata. From the municipio, or city hall, flags are flapping in the warm sea breeze. From the balconies of the inns and private houses flags flutter. Pegli is in gala dress.

"YOU do much honor to your fellow citizen," remarks a reporter as they fly along through the dust.

"Not fellow citizen—friend, brother! Monsignore, His Holiness—we shall have to acquire the habit of calling him so—was not born at Pegli. His Holiness is a Genoese."

But Pegli knows him better than Genoa, for his family has lived at Pegli for many hundreds of years And Giacomo Della Chiesa spent all his boyhood there. The Palazzo Della Chiesa, a two-story-and-attic house of white stone with a roof of red tiles, built in the sixteenth century, stands on the principal street of the town, with a line of trolley cars passing in front. There the older brother of the new Pope, Rear Admiral the Marchese Gianantonio Della Chiesa, spends all his summers. He lives in Rome during the winter.

Throughout the Italian Riviera live relations, all bearing ancient titles of nobility. For Benedict XV, unlike Pius X, is an aristocrat, a scion of that most democratic aristocracy, the ancient Ligurian nobility, the members of which are so prominent in the learned professions and in the trade and commerce of their native land. He can trace his noble ancestry back to the twelfth century.

His father was the Marchese Giuseppe Della Chiesa, and his mother the Marchesa Giovanna Migliorati, both of whom are dead. His elder brother, the Admiral, inherited the title and the palace—fortune there was none. There are also an older sister, now the widow of Count Fausto Persico of Venice, and a younger brother, Giulio, he also an ex-naval officer who retired with the rank of Lieutenant.

It was on Nov. 21, 1854, in the old Palazzo Tagliavacche, No. 10 Salita Santa Caterina, at Genoa, that the Pope was born. He was such a puny, delicate baby that Dr. Alberto Rocco, who brought him into the world with great difficulty, baptized him at once, fearing he would not live many hours. On the following day he was carried by Nena, his nurse, to Nostra Signora delle Vigne (Our Lady of Vines), the parish church, and duly christened, being held over the monumental font in the arms of his godmother, the Marchesa Anna Centurioni, and of his godfather, the Marchese Giacomo Spinola. His mother's family had already given a Pope to the Church, in the person of Innocent VII, who was born Cosimo Migliorati, elected in 1404, and died in 1406.

But the good doctor's forebodings, happily were not realized. The child lived, though he never waxed strong. He was always small, even puny; but running wild on the seashore and among the beautiful Ligurian hills made him healthy.

HIS boyhood chum was Carlo Montalto, son of a neighboring farmer. Montalto is known today as the Pope's dearest friend. His house is near the palace of the Della Chiesas. In these days Carlo Montalto is an important personage. He is being sought out by the newspapers and asked for reminiscences of the Pope's younger days. Here are some of the stories he has been telling so gleefully:

"I have spent so many years with him that now my mind runs back to the old days when we used to romp together on the beach and in the garden. Well do I remember how he behaved then. He used to take part in all our games, but only for a little while. Suddenly, as if struck by an idea, he would stop playing, run off to the house, lock himself into his room and begin studying. He studied too much. His mother, worried about his health, once formally forbade him to open another book. She gave him a little spade and told him to cultivate the garden.

"Monsignore set to work to dig like a little man. The first thing he planted was a small palm tree, which he set out in a pot. In a few years the plant grew to such proportions that a pot would no longer contain it, so he transplanted it to a corner of the garden. Come and look at it."

And the proud man takes his visitor out through the pergola and down through the flower garden and points out a beautiful palm tree whose slender leaves rustle in the wind.

"That palm tree has been the special object of his care. Every time he comes to Pegli he comes to see me, and the first thing he asks is 'How is my palm tree?' He asks after it just as if it were a human being. He looks at it a long time; he touches it gently; it seems as if he were talking to it; then he leaves it and comes into the house. The last time he saw it was when he was made Cardinal. He was here in the house with us, and we sat three hours at the table eating cakes and chatting about bygone days.

"Often from his brother's palace, in recent years, he would watch our chimney. When he saw thick clouds of smoke pouring out he knew we were cooking polenta (corn meal mush). Then he would send a servant to ask me to send one of my children with a nice hot lump.

"And when he was a boy in his early teens he would stand at the open window of his room and practise preaching. When the waves were pouring on the beach he would shout to make his small voice heard over the roaring of the sea."

And yet, the old blind beggar who sits outside the church says:

"It is a pity he has not a stronger voice. When I want to hear him I have to sit right under the pulpit. And they do say he preaches such fine sermons!"

The Pope loves to chaff Montalto about the latter's adventure on the occasion of Della Chiesa's consecration as bishop. The old friends traveled up to Rome together. The ceremony took place in the Sistine Chapel, and Monsignore Della Chiesa told Montalto he would have to wear full dress—what we in America call evening dress, but in Southern Europe it is the costume for all formal occasions. Montalto had no dress suit. He had never worn one. It was necessary to borrow one from a friend. When he came to put it on it was far too tight. He left off as many underclothes as possible, but it was still so tight that throughout the ceremony he was in an agony of dread, and scarcely dared to breathe for fear the coat would burst its back."

So much for the boyhood friend's reminiscences.

The little Giacomo Della Chiesa was ambitious to become a priest. When he was only 13 years he told his father of his desire. The old Marquis was very proud of his boy's intelligence, but planned to make a lawyer of him. He was, however, too good a man to stand in the way of his son's religious career. So he said to him:

"You have plenty of time to think about that, my boy. For the present, keep on with your studies. When you have been graduated we will talk it over."

The young student never mentioned the matter again until he was 21. He studied at a private school kept by Fathers Novaro and De Giusso, and later at a neighboring seminary. In 1875 he received his diploma as a lawyer. Then he went to his father and said:

"Babbo, I am now a lawyer. I ask you to gratify my old desire."

And so he entered the Capranica College in Rome, where four years later he was ordained a priest. He at once entered the Academy for Noble Ecclesiastics, from which the then Monsignor Rampolla took him to be his private secretary. In 1893 Rampolla was made Papal Nuncio in Madrid, a post at that moment of the gravest importance, as the Caroline Islands dispute was being discussed between Spain and Germany. The young priest won the heart of Rampolla, who gave him a training in diplomacy such as could have been obtained from no other man then living. He was an apt pupil, full of determination and tenacity, with a keen mind and ready wit. He was brief and rapid in speech, lively in gesture, but knew when to keep silent. In manner he was a little brusque, and he understood perfectly how to satisfy anyone who wanted to question him, and yet tell him nothing of importance.

When Cardinal Rampolla returned to Rome as Secretary of State to Leo XIII he took Monsignore Della Chiesa with him and made him under secretary. Crispolto Crispolti says of him at that time:

"Cardinal Rampolla had at last found a collaborator who made of politics not merely an unavoidable duty but a program and an ideal of his own; an intelligent, safe, precise co-worker; the interpreter of the spirit of his policies rather than of their outer manifestations."

WHILE working as Under Secretary of State, Monsignore Della Chiesa had modest apartments in the Palazzo Lante in Piazza dei Caprettari, immediately opposite the church of Sant' Eustachio. At 6 o'clock every morning he entered the choir of that church and remained in silent prayer for half an hour. At 6:30 promptly he went to an altar and said mass. Then he entered the confessional and heard all penitents who might come.

In a few months the fame of that Monsignore who heard confessions with such zeal and charity was widespread, and every morning there was a crowd of devout souls awaiting his tender ministrations.

The parish priests soon came to know Monsignore Della Chiesa's penitents, and when one of them was ill they notified him. In such cases he was assiduous in his attentions at the bedside of the sick person.

When the last sacraments were to be carried to the dying he always allowed one of the parish priests the honor of bearing the Blessed Sacrament, and he was content to serve as deacon.

The priests of Sant' Eustachio are telling today many stories of the quiet, gentle way in which he used to help them in their work among the poor, in his charities, never letting his left hand know what his right was doing.

As a brother of the Archcon-fraternity of San Rocco he attended the solemn reunions regularly, and never failed to follow the dead, wearing the shroud and bearing the cross while reciting prayers for the departed soul. Every Friday, in shroud and with cross, he attended the devotion of the Way to the Cross.

Every Catholic is familiar with the Forty Hours' Devotion. For the benefit of Protestants, it may be well to say that the churches of a city take it in turn to keep the Blessed Sacrament exposed upon the altar day and night for 40 hours, in order that there may never be a moment of the year when some worshipprs are not adoring it. During the night, whenever this is

THE SEALED ART GALLERY

Rarely, if ever, has the "Man of Forty Faces" been confronted with such a seemingly inexplicable tangle of circumstances as in this case of the missing jewels—and jewel collector. The weird environment, with its Burmese monkey-idol, potted flowers, open skylight and suspected balloon, gives added prestige to Cleek's triumph, with Ailsa for inspiration and reward.

"NUM-BAH six-sixty-four—Major Maltravers, please — six-sixty-four, Numbah six-sixty-four."

Over the crowded coffeeroom of the Regent Hotel, the droning voice of the commissionaire, resplendent in the scarlet and gold uniform of London's greatest hotel company, broke in on the clatter of cups and saucers, and the subdued hum of many voices. It broke in also upon the reverie of a certain tall, fair-hair, fair-mustache gentleman, sitting in one of the sunny bay windows—with the word "military" fairly shrieking from the tips of his patent leather shoes, to the crown of his carefully-groomed head; while as if to make his calling more obvious, he was apparently absorbed in perusing the Army and Navy Gazette. But at the fourth time of asking, he raised his head and in a drawling voice called the man over to him.

"Beg pardon, sir, but there's a 'tiger'—I beg pardon—a footman—just handed in this card and says his lordship would be glad if you could spare him a few moments. If so, would you drive down to the Junior Club in his car, which is waiting outside."

Major Maltravers fixed an utterly useless monocle into his right eye and squinted at the piece of pasteboard, on which was inscribed in the neatest of copperplate, "The Earl of Essenden, Junior Club."

"Yes, 'pon me soul—I might as well finish this dem'd rag at the club as in this den of chattering monkeys," drawled the major condescendingly, twirling his fair, waxed mustache with languid fingers. "All right, commissionaire—I'll join his lordship." And getting to his feet he swaggered out into the grand entrance hall of the Regent Hotel, where he found the aforesaid "tiger," in whose eyes showed a doglike devotion to Capt. Maltravers, while in one of the most comfortable chairs sat a short, stumpy, full-beard gentleman, whose immaculate clothes and well-corseted figure bore witness to a painful if somewhat misguided desire to achieve the sprightliness of youth.

"My dear Lord Essenden—a thousand apologies for keeping you waiting," cried the Major.

"Delighted," said the stout gentleman, allowing the effusive Major to link his arm affectionately in his and bear him off to the swinging doors, which were just being pushed around on their pivot to allow the entry of a man whose bearing was that of the aristocratic gentleman, and whose clothes bore that unmistakably "foreign" look that betokens the upper classes in other lands.

AT the sight of him, Lord Essenden clutched at the Major's arm with painful intensity and went a little pale under his ruddy tan. But the Major chatted away gaily enough.

Outside on the steps the pair walked quietly down till the "tiger" had darted to the door of the elegantly coronetted limousine, and throwing it open saw his lordship and his guest ensconced in their seats; then mounting the driver's seat, beside a resplendent chauffeur, folded his arms with an aristocratic calm that was decidedly comical to those who knew Dollop. Once the limousine had swung into the crowded thoroughfare of Park Lane, the "Major" leaned back with a little laugh of sheer satisfaction and laid a hand upon his companion's arm.

"Bravo, my friend! Bravo!" said he softly. "Your figure is the very height of aristocratic elegance, while that card was an absolute inspiration!"

"It ought to be, considering the trouble I had to get it printed," replied Lord Essenden, unbuttoning his tightly fastened coat; "and this waistcoat—Phew! it's like a straight jacket—'pon my soul, but it's cruel of you, Cleek—absolutely cruel!"

"As how, my friend?" queried that gentleman blandly.

"Good Lord, man, didn't you see who that dark man was—just now? No less than Count Irma himself. And the place is literally swarming with French people—they may be in league with Margot's gang for aught I know. I've had inquiries made and got all our men on the watch, but with you here in their midst like this—I didn't know how to get at you at first, but I had to adopt some disguise, and it's no easy task with a man of my build; and why you want to take up your quarters in the identical hotel with Count Irma, I can't see!"

"But to return to our muttons—I am not so conceited as to imagine you went to all this discomfort, to say nothing of rigging up Dollops as that detestable 'tiger,' for the sheer love of seeing what I was doing. It's a case, I presume?"

Mr. Narkom fairly jumped.

"A case? I should say it was a case! and the devil himself's at the bottom of it."

"Well, let's have it—all the facts as quick as you like—I presume you know, or rather Lennard does, where you are taking me, for it's more than I do, save"—Cleek's eyes darted to the window and back again—"that it's out of town somewhere."

"Right, b'gad," said Mr. Narkom jubilantly. "It's out beyond Croydon way—Purely Oaks, to be exact—and how the devil the thing's been done licks me into a cocked hat. Burmese idols don't come to life, especially if they're embalmed monkeys into the bargain, and besides, what has become of the man himself?"

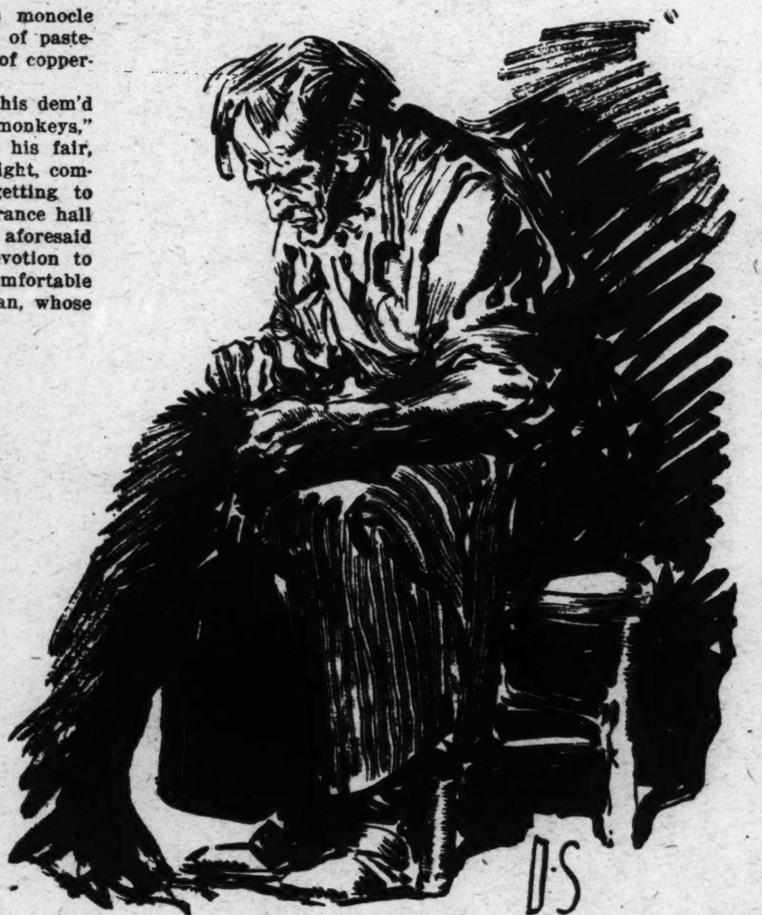
"H'm, I see—it isn't murder, then, this time?"

"Not unless the dead body has been found by the time we reach the Clock Manor. Biggest house in the district; stands in its own grounds, and has a special clock on its turret—it belongs to a Mr. Paravetch!"

Cleek sat a moment thinking.

"Paravetch—Russian," he muttered. "Russians—jewelry—rings—Paravetch—got it!" he cried, with a jump that nearly rolled Mr. Narkom off his seat. "Wasn't there a Mr. Paravetch—Anton Paravetch, I think, a Russian furrier, with money, who bought a ring at Christie's the other day—consisting of one colossal diamond—called the 'Emperor'—and paid something like £5000 for it—if my memory serves me right? Any relation to that individual?"

"That's just it—he's disappeared—he and the ring, too. He has a mint of money, so there can't be any question of bankruptcy or anything of that sort. Why, only last week he had to ask me for police protection because some Russian princess paid for her furs £10,000 in gold and notes, instead of a check. Can't make it out one or the other."



* * * "Seeing nothing, hearing nothing, with his head bent low over his work."

"WHEN did you come into this?" Cleek queried sharply.

"Yesterday morning. Mr. Paravetch was shown into my office at the Yard about two minutes after I had arrived there."

"An ordinary burglary?"

"No, indeed—an extraordinary series of burglaries. Clock Manor holds some of the most wonderful art treasures outside of a museum. Among them is the embalmed body of Hanuman, the monkey god, said to be of fabulous value, as it was brought straight from its temple."

"Has Mr. Paravetch been to India himself?" interposed Cleek.

"Yes—all over the world, I should say. Well, during the last six weeks, Mr. Paravetch has missed one or two small jewels—quite valuable enough to make their loss worth mentioning, only as far as I can see, he was afraid of being held up to ridicule in the daily press.

"Ridicule—as how, my friend? Why should a burglary be a source of amusement?"

"Yes, but you see, dear old chap, he will have it that the monkey god has taken them."

"Oh, rubbish! Tell that to the marines—if that's his idea—a stuffed monkey getting up in the night to steal things of no earthly use to him if he were alive. I don't wonder the good gentleman is afraid of being laughed at."

The superintendent nodded gravely.

Exactly as I thought; only the thing, whatever it is, has been heard walking about at night, and now two nights ago it was seen by one of the maids."

"Oh, ho!" cried Cleek, "that's a horse of a different colr. This sounds interesting—What happened then?"

"Oh, she fainted, and by the time the other servants had rushed up and succeeded in reviving her, when they did bethink themselves of looking to see whether the blessed monkey was still on its perch, so to speak, of course there was nothing to see."

"Nothing been stolen, either, I suppose?"

"No—apparently the burglar—for I take it to be a burglar—was surprised by the girl's entry, but how or where beats me. The girl herself will have it that it was the monkey god himself, tail and bristles and all, and that the pedestal—which is solid marble, by the way—was empty."

"Marble, eh! What color?—but perhaps you don't know"——

"As it happens, I do—it is black, or to be precise, black with streaks of green in it—I went right down yesterday and looked over the ground myself—but what's that got to do with it? Blue, black, green or gray—a man can't vanish into a block of marble, and I'll swear he couldn't have got through any other way, for the windows are not big enough to push a cat through."

"Just an idle thought of mine," said Cleek serenely. "Well, if that's three nights ago since anything happened where does the 'Emperor' diamond come in?"

Mr. Narkom threw up his hands in a very real despair. "It doesn't come in—it's gone out, and so has Mr. Paravetch," said he sorrowfully. "As I said before, the whole thing is inexplicable! When young Nikolai Paravetch came to me this morning"——

"Hullo! Hullo! Who's this?" asked Cleek, sitting up very straight in his seat. "Mr. Paravetch got a son or what?"

"Yes—absolutely devoted to him, as you will see for yourself. Tuesday night, young Nikolai watched, and save for catching a remarkably bad cold, that's about the only thing he did catch. Wednesday night, it was Mr. Paravetch's turn, and after he and the young man had searched the gallery, to be perfectly sure there was no one concealed in the room, Nikolai retired to his own bed. Old Paravetch locked himself in, and we presume made himself as comfortable as possible for the night."

"How about the 'Emperor'—was that all right, then?"

"Oh, yes—quite—locked up in his steel-lined case—and Nikolai says the last thing he remembers was watching his father put away that great dazzling ball of light."

"What about the windows—they were covered, I suppose?"

"Well, there's only one, and that has a flat roller blind, but only part of it will open, that is, the other part is just flat glass in the roof—the gallery is built for a studio. Hullo! what's the matter?" for Cleek had switched around in his seat and was staring fixedly at him.

"NOTHING—but that alters things considerably to my mind—but go on—go on—what happened?"

"God knows," was the emphatic reply. "All Nikolai could tell me was, that when 8 o'clock came and Mr. Paravetch had made no sign the young man went up to the gallery and knocked and knocked, and at last, getting no reply, called the man-servant and the chauffeur, and together they battered down the door. Judge of their colossal surprise when they found the room empty as regards Mr. Paravetch! The key was still in the lock of the door. Not a sign of a struggle or disturbance was there to be seen, but a clean haul made of every jewel of value in the place, besides the 'Emperor' itself. Lord only knows what the extent of the loss is yet. Nikolai—to give him his due—is more concerned over the loss of his father, and trying to comfort his mother."

"Oh, ho! so there's a Mrs. Paravetch, is there?" commented Cleek, fitting the finger-tips of one hand to the finger-tips of the other.

"I should think there was—and as clever a woman herself as you would meet in a day's walk."

Cleek smiled.

"H'm," he said casually, "sometimes clever people overreach themselves."

"Well, dear chap, you'll do the same, if you're thinking of fixing any blame onto Mrs. Paravetch. Well, anyway, that's all I can tell you. You must just see into the matter for yourself. Meanwhile, I only said I would bring a good man down, so"——

"Good, but stupid, eh? Well, my friend, switch on the lights and down with the blinds, and let's see what George Headland can scratch up out of his silly blundering old head. Here's Croydon at last; I'll have to hurry. And another few minutes should give us the inestimable pleasure of Mr. Nikolai Paravetch's society and acquaintance."

ANOTHER five minutes did give him the inestimable pleasure, and another still greater pleasure also, for, even as he entered the room, he found himself in the company of the woman dearest to him on earth, and for the minute he could scarcely believe his own eyes.

She was seated near Mrs. Paravetch, whose handsome face was lined with grief and furrowed with an unutterable sorrow. And for a brief second he hesitated, uncertain how to act, but Ailsa, who had recognized him in "George Headland's" personality, rose with unconcealed pleasure shining from her eyes. "Oh, Mr. Headland," she murmured, extending a hand to him in greeting. "I am so glad you have come, I was only saying to Mrs. Paravetch this morning, if Mr. Narkom could only put you upon the case"——

The whole party welcomed the sudden entry of a dark, thick-set young man of about 25, and it did not need the sudden look of adoration that swept over the elder woman's face to tell Cleek that this was her son, Nikolai, of whom Mr. Narkom had spoken.

"Oh, thank God you have come!" cried the young man, after the introductions were over and he stood beside Cleek in earnest conversation with him. "Bring him back, Mr. Headland, find him—the 'Emperor' matters nothing, it is this awful suspense that hurts. There is some devil's trick at the bottom of it. We haven't had a lucky day since that confounded 'monkey' entered the place. The man who brought it to my father told him afterward there was a curse upon it, and right well has it worked. My father laughed at the fancy—as indeed anyone would in this century, but what is one to say against facts? I myself heard the footsteps overhead in the gallery, and yet when we rushed upstairs there was not a sign nor a hole that a mouse could crawl through—and every day the losses have been more and more great. And now my father is gone—and the curse—or whatever it is—may attack anyone next—my mother"—he flashed a look of mute affection to her that warmed Cleek's heart. "Myself, I don't care a rap. If I could only do anything—anything in the world to keep it from her. But I can't—I can't. Nothing can stop it evidently!"

"Stop what—Mr. Paravetch—the dead monkey god?" asked Cleek smoothly.

"Dead—rubbish," the young man flung back in tones of biting scorn. "There's no dead monkey about it—that's sheer nonsense, as you know, Mr. Headland. Dead monkeys can't walk about the room by day or night—dead monkeys can't get through bolted doors and windows, nor climb walls 60 feet high. There's human trickery somewhere, but where—where? If one could only see signs of their appearing in the open; but these secret, semisupernatural tricks—if only my father had listened to Ivan and myself."

"AND who, may I ask, is Ivan?"

"Ivan Sergiovitch, my cousin," replied Nikolai promptly. "He has lived with us for some years now, and was as devoted to my father as myself. He has nearly gone mad since the disappearance."

Suddenly Ailsa lifted a listening finger.

"Hark," said she, "here he comes."

Through the silence which followed they could hear the persistent tap, tap, of a stick along the passage outside.

"Blind," he said, quietly, with a quick look at Ailsa. She bowed her head and Nikolai, with a sudden welcoming smile overspreading his saddened face, fairly ran to the door and threw it open.

"Here we are, dear lad, here we are!" he cried, his voice thrilling with a great affection.

The tapping stick came nearer, and even as he listened, Cleek saw a slim, fair-hair, smooth-shaven fellow whose closed eyes gave silent token to the sorrow with which he lived, enter the room.

"Nikolai—haven't they found him—is there no news?" he asked, in tones of singular sweetness.

"None at present, cousin, but these gentlemen, Mr. Headland and Mr. Narkom, are here to find out."

The blind man tossed up his head.

"What is the use of coming here?" said he, with the petulance of a spoiled child. "Do you think if my dear Uncle Anton were in this house, I—I who owe him more than my life—would not know it—blind as I am?"

"Yes, indeed, Ivan, I know that, we all do," put in Ailsa Lorne, ever so softly; "but Scotland Yard must work in its own way."

"S'pose you've known the family some time, Miss Lorne, eh?" Cleek said in his rough Headland manner. "Funny, I never heard you mention the fact before. But that's as far as it goes. What I want to see is the room where the losses have taken place."

"Come, then," said Nikolai, wondering at the callousness that was in Cleek's voice, and led the way from the room, while the superintendent and "Mr. Headland" followed him. Mrs. Paravetch sank down in her seat, and placed a loving hand on the arm of the blind man.

"No, no, Ivan, stay here," she said softly. "It can do no good to re-enter that room—stay here with me."

The superintendent had said the room was at the top of the house, with but one large flat glass window in the roof, only part of which would lift up. It seemed almost incredible that a grown man could have got through from the inside, especially as there was no chair or table—let alone steps—high enough to reach within arm's length of the window itself.

Cleek looked curiously about him. The walls of the room were of the conventional plaster, and papered with a dull-brown art paper, on which hung countless pictures of value, while around the room were ranged cases, in which reposed treasures of china, ivory and bronze, jeweled boxes, and all the hundred and one trifles dear to a collector's heart. That none of these had been touched was evident. The only article that appeared incongruous in this temple of beauty was the iron safe, which stood clamped to the wall, and whose door swung idly open, showing its empty state.

"I FOUND it locked," said Nikolai, speaking quickly, as Cleek advanced toward it! "but as I have a duplicate key, I was enabled to examine it. It only contained one case of rings, but they were of immense value, and included the great 'Emperor' ring. And all had vanished!"

"Yes, so I heard," said Cleek, pausing mechanically at a table standing near, on which was a magnificent majolica tub filled with scarlet gladioli growing freely and forming a glorious spot of color in its somewhat somber surroundings. "Bit of all right,' he murmured, scratching his head abstractedly. "Reminds me of Battersea Park, don't yer know."

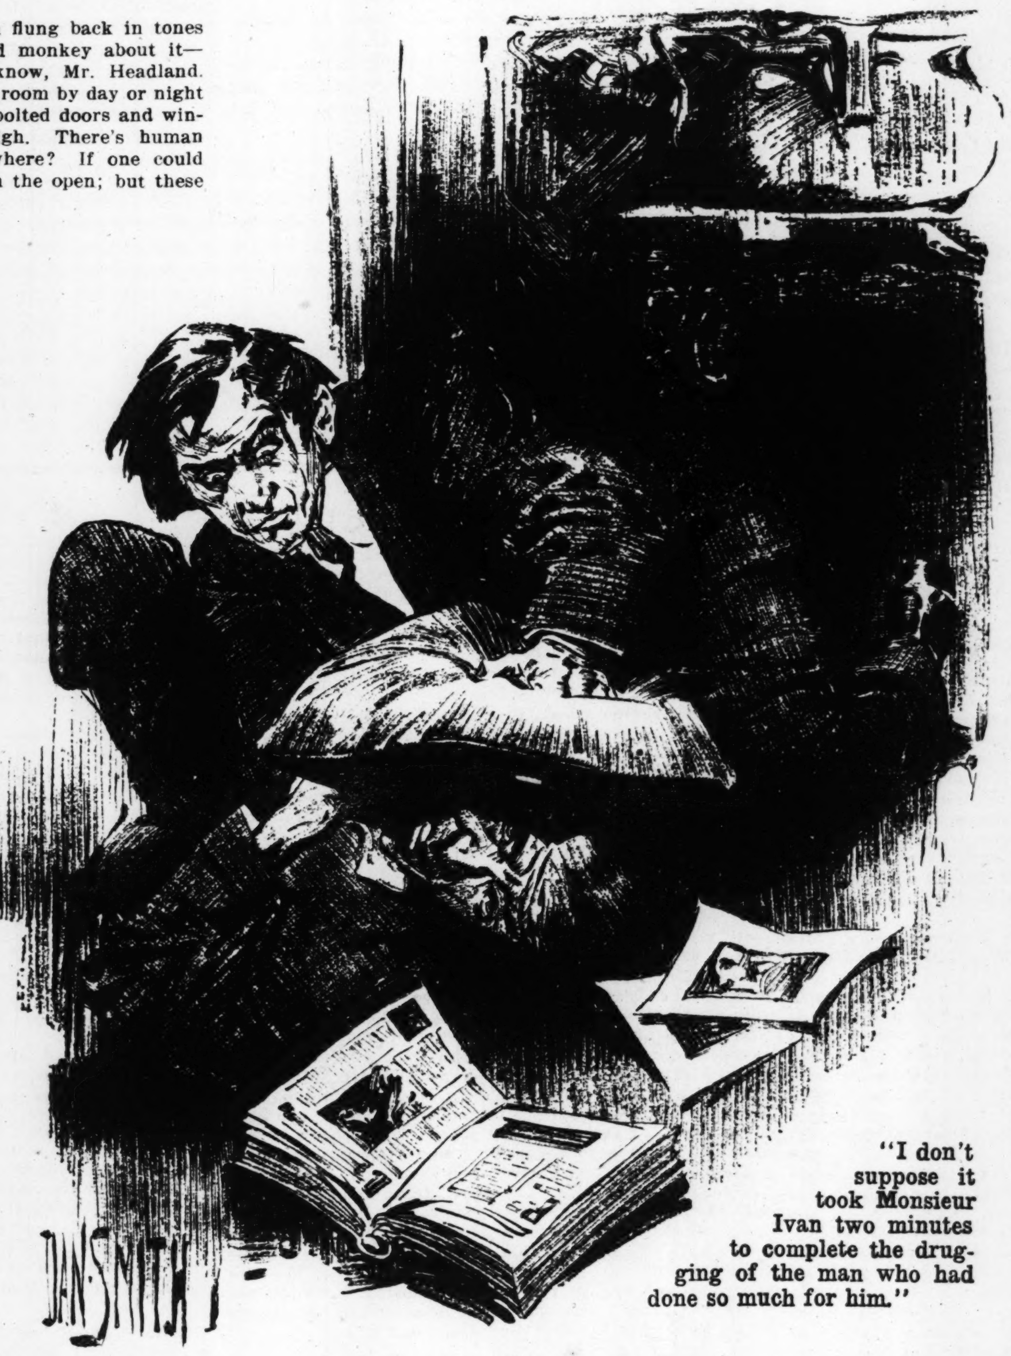
Young Nikolai's strained eyes softened slightly.

"Yes, next to his jewels, the little father loved his flowers best. His very last thoughts before he fell asleep were of them."

"Before he fell asleep?" snapped Cleek quickly, switching round on his heels and facing the man with keen eyes. "How did you know he fell asleep, eh?"

Nikolai bit his lips confusedly.

"Well," he said, with a touch of defiance, "it's what you would expect him to do—but I judged from the way his pen trailed off—see—this piece of paper was under the couch. I kept it because it must have been the last thing he touched. I didn't mention it to anyone."



"I don't suppose it took Monsieur Ivan two minutes to complete the drugging of the man who had done so much for him."

Cleek fairly snatched at the scrap of paper, on which was written but two words, "Repot gladioli"— There the writing stopped, and it was there that the pencil had obviously fallen from his hand.

"Quite right to treasure it, Mr. Paravetch, "but it isn't much use to the Yard, I'm afraid. Your father was obviously thinking of his flowers." He turned aside to peer into the empty safe. "What you call a clean sweep," he said musingly, "and no error—and now, where's the blessed monkey?"

He turned upon his heel, and following the direction of Nikolai's finger, saw it at the opposite end of the room.

It was a strange thing, uncanny, in that it was an embalmed body of a real monkey, of an extremely rare species. Around its neck hung strings of jewels, dangling in wonderful profusion over the furry breast.

"H'm—funny thing the thief didn't touch the monkey's jewels," said Cleek under his breath. Then he moved a little farther toward the thing and felt at one of the chains with his fingers. "Ah! Imitation, I see. That alters the face of things considerably,"

"Not so much as you think," struck in Nikolai. "My father would never let an imitation stone enter his collection. Those jewels are real, Mr. Headland, absolutely real."

"Sorry to contradict you," Cleek said, "but if they're real pearls, I'll eat my head."

He handed over one of the necklaces and watched, while the young man fingered it and then gave vent to a sudden, despairing little cry.

"Good Heavens! Yes, Mr. Headland. You are right—horribly right!" fairly sobbed that young gentleman, in a heart-broken tone. "My poor old father—it will be the death of him—even if he is not already dead—Not real, not real!"

Cleek made no reply in words, merely moved about the room, with his eyes fixed on the various things it possessed. Once he crossed over to where Hanuman, the monkey god, stood, and ran his hands over the hairy body, then darted across the room to tap the walls, which he found to be absolutely solid.

Lastly, he came to the couch, beside which, upon a table, stood the half-smoked cigar, and untasted glass of whisky and water, and the open pages of an art monthly bore mute witness to the way in which the worthy art-collector had settled himself for the night.

Cleek took up the glass of whisky and sniffed at it several times, then dipped his finger into it, and carried the moistened tip to his mouth.

"Remarkably good Irish whisky, Mr. Paravetch," he remarked blandly.

"Scotch, Mr. Headland. My dear father never touched a drop of Irish whisky in his life, if he could help it—he hated it.

"H'm!" Cleek's eyes narrowed suddenly to pin points. "Well, that's Irish enough, as you can taste for yourself, but I should advise you to let it alone." He picked up the half-burnt cigar and raised that to his nose. "Drugged—a dollar to a ducat, but it's drugged," he shouted, delightedly "Opium, I should say. Yes, opium"——

"Impossible," struck in Nikolai. "That cigar was one from my own case, Mr. Headland. I gave it to my father just before I left him. You're not suggesting that I—I"——

"Good Lord, no, my friend. Your father must just have changed it somehow. Suppose you haven't got a duplicate key of the door here, as well as the safe?"

"Just as it happens, I have," was the sullen reply; "but if you think I entered the room from the moment I left him there fumbling with the 'Emperor' ring, you're mistaken. I went straight up to bed, and Ivan can give you proof of that, because I called good-night to him as he passed on his way to his room."

Cleek smiled reassuringly.

"Oh, I quite believe you," said he, in a placid tone. "There's no need to tell me that. Still, we policemen have to follow out certain rules and customs, you know, so if you wouldn't mind going down and fetching the young gentleman up here"—

"Preposterous nonsense!" ejaculated Nikolai. "Perhaps your colleague had better accompany me, to see I don't coach my cousin up and get him to perjure himself."

Cleek smiled serenely.

"That would be hardly necessary, I should say; but custom is custom, so perhaps you're right, and if Mr. Narkom doesn't mind"——

Mr. Narkom intimated that he would be delighted.

THEY were not gone ten minutes, however, and when they returned it was to find Mr. George Headland deeply engrossed in fastening a head of the scarlet gladioli into his buttonhole, with a "blithering idiot" expression upon his face and a sort of smiling content shining in his eyes.

"I'm sorry I troubled you to go down for the other gentleman. I see there isn't any need to disbelieve you, and if Mr. Narkom is satisfied"——

"Quite, quite," said that gentleman hurriedly.

"My cousin is quite ready to answer any questions," struck in Nikolai, as Cleek opened his mouth to speak. "It is a long climb up here for him, and he is not strong."

"Oh, all right, I'll come down." Cleek screwed around on his heel and beckoning to Mr. Narkom, came forth from the room and shut the door behind him, as the figures of the cousins followed.

Outside on the landing, however, he halted.

"I say," he blurted out suddenly, "what about the roof—is it possible to get out on the leads? Never thought of that before."

"Quite possible," replied Nikolai, promptly. "You can get up here." He led the way to another door at the end of the landing. "This leads up to the skylight, but there's nothing to be seen up there—unless you want to go."

For answer, Cleek skipped nimbly enough up the narrow, iron staircase, and thence onto the flat roof, on which he literally crawled about, like a puppy out for a romp in the sun. Then suddenly he pounced upon something and sat back upon his heels surveying it."

"See a pin and let it lie," he chuckled, "you'll need a pin, etc., etc., eh? Well, well, I've done my duty, sir, and I'll be taking myself off. I'd like to see this place again at night, and so, Mr. Paravetch, I may come back again. Give me an hour, and let me poke about in my own way, and I think I may say you will see the last of the troublesome Hanuman. Just an hour, Mr. Paravetch, no longer."

With which he turned on his heels and plunged down the steps, followed by Mr. Narkom. Down to the avenue possible, the priests and the most devout of the laity take it in turn to pass a few hours in adoration. There is in Rome a society the members of which are consecrated to attendance at the Forty Hours' Devotion during the night hours. This society was founded by Mgr. Della Chiesa; he was its president for a while, and he never failed to take his turn from 10 o'clock to 2 or from 2 to 6 in the adoration.

The last night of the year invariably found him kneeling at the altar of whichever church was then holding the Forty Hours, in order that he might greet the birth of a new year in prayer to his Savior. This pious practice he has kept up throughout his life.

With the death of Leo XIII came many changes at the Vatican. Cardinal Merry del Val took the place of Cardinal Rampolla as Secretary of State. Mgr. Della Chiesa, however, remained at his post, and it is said that Ambassadors and Ministers in those days paid more attention to the Under Secretary than to the Secretary. Every evening on leaving the Vatican he would go over to the Palazzetto di Santa Marta and spend an hour or two with his lonely old chief.

SOME say that Cardinal Merry del Val feared the clever pupil of Rampolla and that he sought a good occasion to get rid of him. However this may be, it is certain that when in 1908 Mgr. Della Chiesa was made Archbishop of Bologna the appointment was generally regarded as an effort on the part of Merry del Val to get him out of the way. Some color was lent to this by the omission to make the new Archbishop a Cardinal. Bologna, one of the most important dioceses in Italy, has almost from time immemorial had a Cardinal as its Archbishop.

The Bolognesi rather resented this, and some of them at least showed their resentment by the coolness with which they treated their new Archbishop. He probably never noticed this, for there was much work to be done, some of it work that had been started by his predecessor, Cardinal Svampa, and he pitched in and did it with an energy and an attention to detail that astonished many of the clergy. He never mixed up in local politics and never sought popularity. In Bologna today they say he was more respected than beloved. In Pegli and in Genoa, where they have known him longer and better, there is much more of personal exultation over his election to the chair of St. Peter than there is in Bologna.

He was not made Cardinal until last May. When that event took place the Bolognesi decided that they must do something for him. Accordingly a public subscription was taken up, and they presented to the Cardinal a fine motor car. This paid for, they had a balance of about 5000 lire ($1000), which they were at a loss as to how to spend. They asked the Cardinal's advice.

"Give it to me," he said, "for I have been obliged to run into debt on this occasion."

Which was quite true. The expenses of installation as a Cardinal are heavy, and Cardinal Della Chiesa was poor and generous. No needy person was ever turned away from his door. So he had more urgent use for that money than anyone else.

AS Archbishop he was strict, not only with the clergy but with the laity. Among other things he forbade was dancing the tango. His prohibition was so generally obeyed that a certain dancing master who was making a specialty of the tango found himself ruined. He went to Angelo Ragghianti a journalist and a friend of the Archbishop, and asked him to plead for a relaxation of the edict. Ragghianti stated the case to the Cardinal, who, he says, was "inexorable, cold and agitated." When the unfortunate condition of the dancing master was described to him he did not swerve, but it was learned afterward that he sent the tango teacher 200 lire.

Benedict XV is a man of the broadest culture. He has painted some religious pictures. He writes poetry in Latin and in Italian. He can talk equally well on sport, military affairs, history, philosophy, art, literature. That he is thoroughly up to date in his reading is proved by the story of a Bologna journalist, who relates that at a reception after a lecture on Valentina Bistolfi he repeated the lines:

"Per la memoria pia di Valetina Che fedele al sue lutto patir volea."

when the Cardinal interrupted with:

"Ah! d'Annunzio's lines. It is the Song of Eleanor of France. A great song, that!"

But Benedict XV is not the first Pope to read d'Annunzio. Leo XIII was a great admirer of that poet and often expressed regret that he did not put his genius to better use.

WHEN Cardinal Della Chiesa went to Rome for the conclave there were comparatively few who even thought of the possibility of his election. But there were a few. One of the leading Roman newspapers, in printing a list of the three or four Cardinals who stood the best chance of election, devoted a full half column to him. However, he was looked upon as almost sure to be Cardinal Merry del Val's successor in the event of Cardinal Ferrata's election. Instead of that the positions were just reversed. Della Chiesa was chosen Pope. Ferrata Secretary of State. But Ferrata lived scarcely long enough to be installed.

When the conclave met, Filippo Palombi, the Vatican tailor, was ordered to prepare three new complete Papal costumes of three sizes—one large, one medium, one small—in order that whosoever might be elected Pope should find the clothes ready for him.

After the conclave adjourned, as soon as he had received the homage of the other Cardinals and given the Papal benediction to the crowd that filled St. Peter's the new Pope knelt a long time in silent prayer. Then his faithful servant, Marino Fagiani, served him a luncheon of grapes and a soft-boiled egg.

Refreshed by this abstemious meal, Benedict XV told Mgr. Migone, his chaplain, that the costume he had donned—the smallest of the three prepared by Palombi—was much too large, and asked that the tailor be sent for to refit the clothes.

At 2:30 Palombi arrived and in great perturbation took the Pope's proper measurements, therewith refitted the garments. As he worked he remarked:

"Your Holiness, it is only three months since I had the honor of making your costume as Cardinal."

"And yet," replied the Pope, with a quizzical smile, "in making the new pontifical robes it never occurred to you to make a suit that would fit my stature!"

The tailor was stammering out some vague justification, when the Pope cut him short by reappointing him official Papal tailor.

BENEDICT XV is physically a very small and slender man. His right shoulder is slightly higher than his left. But when he raises his head you realize at once that you are looking at a man of exceptional intellectual power and of great energy. He has a full white forehead, crowned with glossy black hair. His eyes are black, keen and penetrating, under heavy lids; his mouth is large, with lips that are thin but full of expression. His voice is said to be poor; his words are uttered as if each was carefully weighed, but as he talks the hearer is struck by the lucidity with which he expresses his ideas, denoting exquisite clearness of thought. One who knows him well says you never forget anything Mgr. Della Chiesa tells you. At one time it was his duty to receive reporters at the Vatican. Those who knew him then say he kept them only a few moments, but what he said in those few moments often contained meat enough for long articles, because every word he uttered was important and not a word was wasted.

He talks standing. Often he holds his slender, aristocratic hands hidden in the pockets of his cassock. He has a way of suddenly twisting his head and looking fixedly at the ceiling or out of the windows, then as suddenly concentrating upon his interlocutor the large spectacles that magnify the glistening black pupils behind.

The Mystery of the Sealed Art Gallery

where Lennard and the liveried Dollops awaited them.

"Any ideas, old chap?" querried the superintendent, as Cleek whipped out his notebook and was scribbling at a furious rate.

"Several," was the reply. "Just try and find this out for me, dear old chap, and let me alone until five o'clock,"

HE thrust the bit of paper into the superintendent's hand, and turning upon his heel passed on and out into a narrow lane running in the opposite direction, while the superintendent, with something akin to disgust in his look, bent his eyes upon the piece of paper that his cupped hand held.

It wanted but two minutes of the hour of five and the rays of the sun were losing something of their golden splendor when Cleek once more approached Clock Manor and was shown into the drawing room where Mrs. Paravetch sat, a still, grave figure, refusing all comfort, even from Ailsa, who sat close beside her, holding one hand in hers.

Close on Cleek's heels came Mr. Narkom, whose glum face was evidently the outcome of a bitter disappointment.

"Well, my friend, did you find it?" said Cleek with eyes that twinkled somewhat at the worthy superintendent's apparent discomfiture. "Ah, well, I was a little more fortunate—come with me, all of you." He turned to the little group that had assembled in the room upon his arrival, Ailsa, Mrs. Paravetch and Nikolai. "The muddle is not entirely solved, but I know sufficient to make it worth while relieving you of part of the mystery."

In utter silence they trooped out of the room after him looking at each other and misbelieving as only such people in such circumstances could misbelieve—up the staircase, and at the first landing came into contact with Ivan, the blind man, who halted irresolutely at the sound of their footsteps.

Cleek was the first to address him.

"Back again, Mr. Ivan," he said in clear, concise tones—"going to have a look at those glorious gladioli of yours. Perhaps you would care to come too"——

The blind man shuddered involuntarily.

"I will come—yes," he said in a low, tremulous voice, "but I hate the room—and I never go into it if I can help it."

Cleek laid a hand upon the man's arm and turned him gently around as though he were on a pivot, and involuntarily he followed them.

ARRIVED at the top story of the house, Nikolai fitted a key in the lock and threw open the door of the fateful room. Cleek entered it, making straight for the table upon which the pot of gladioli stood.

"There it is, the beauty," said he. "It's a pity you can't see it for yourself, Mr. Sergiovitch, isn't it? It would have saved everybody such a lot of trouble—what's that, Mr. Nikolai? Anything wrong with it? No, indeed, it's been the saving of your fortune, if not the life of your father. See, I'm going to take his advice. I'm going to repot it, always providing you have no objection."

Too mystified by his words to prevent him even if they had wished, Mrs. Paravetch and her son stood watching—watching while Cleek plunged his hands into the rich dark mould and pulled forth one after the other—soiled, earth-stained lumps, which proved on investigation to be the missing jewel cases!

"The rings!" gasped Ivan Sergiovitch. Cleek gave vent to a little laugh.

"Ah—my friend—none so blind as those who won't see, eh?" he said. "What's that?' No, you're not going to escape now." He made a lunge at the swiftly moving figure of the man, that went not toward the door but to the pedestal of the Hanuman—the "monkey god."

"That's right, my friend—try it for yourself, but that door is closed—and there's no kindly balloon to send down it's rope and yank you into safety again. You would—you?—Got him, by Jupiter, got him!"

A snarl and a scuffle, the snapping of handcuffs, then the crash of a falling body thudding to the stone floor and before you could say "Jack Robinson" there stood Cleek, with his chin flung up and his eyes snapping fire, and the writhing, shrieking thing upon the floor that was a man, bearing silent witness to the testimony of his strength.

Nikolai sprang forward and threw himself upon Cleek. "What does this mean, Mr. Headland?" he shouted. "Good Heavens! Ivan not—not blind—Ivan done anything wrong—impossible!"

"Not so," replied Cleek, turning gently to him and laying a hand upon his shoulder. "You are not the first to nurture a viper in your breast, and I was quite certain that he was not blind, by the twitching of his eyes as the sunlight blazed on them. That made me think. Then when I found Hanuman a pneumatic figure on a movable pedestal"——

"What!" cried Nikolai—and with one leap was at the base of the monkey's throne.

"Yes," said Cleek, "I soon saw that by this little knob and tube fitted just under the tail, to say nothing of feeling the air-stuffed animal for myself. That proved to me that someone had fitted it up so that the deflated skin on the black marble would be invisible, leading the superstitious to believe if they saw this young gentleman in his monkey disguise that it was indeed the god come to life. Of course it was easy enough to blow it out again with a good bellows afterward and—added to this—I saw that the solid stone pedestal swings around on a pivot and is partly hollow. When the hollowed outside is against the wall it is easy for a youth of comparatively small stature such as our amiable friend here to crawl into it. From that convenient cupboard just outside, and through which, as you see, he has taken away the panel, to conceal himself in the marble—and hey, presto!—around it goes. The treasures were at his mercy, and his blindness made him practically invulnerable against suspicion. But this time I should say he has failed"——he darted back to the table and opened the cases, disclosing, not only the great "Emperor" diamond, but the string of pearls which generally hung around Hanuman's neck.

A SORT of groan broke from Sergiovitch's lips. Cleek turned upon him like a flash.

"You were certainly blind this time, my friend," said he with a little laugh. "All your careful drugging of the cigar and the changed whiskey—all went for nothing.

"Ah, but it's easy to reconstruct what happened that night. I take it that Mr. Paravetch was about as brave a man as is to be met with in London, and he guessed human wickedness to be at the bottom of those 'monkey tricks.' Probably it occurred to him that any minute he might be shot at from above—and that the thief could make off with the rings before help came even though he risked breaking his neck for them. Looking all around, he must eventually have thought of burying them in that Majolica pot of earth so that they should be safe, and when the gladioli was repotted—they would turn up. How do I know, Mr. Narkom? Firstly there were the dried earth marks on the cigar where his fingers had obviously held it, and some scattered mold on the floor behind—that and Mr. Nikolai's scrap of paper did the rest.

"He must have finished his task and sat down to a cigar—and was only half drugged, by the opium in it, when around swung our friend Hanuman and his pedestal and in comes our grateful friend here. Quite a tragic little surprise for both parties, and I don't suppose it took Monsieur Ivan two minutes to complete the drugging of the man who had done so much for him, for this cushion smelt abominably of chloroform."

But before he could speak further Mrs. Paravetch had started forward with a little anguished sob.

"But where is he? Where is my husband? Is he dead? Is he kidnaped? What has become of him?"

Cleek's face grew a little grave.

"Ah, dear lady," said he gently, "I told you I had not solved all the riddle yet. All I can tell you at present is that his unconscious body was drawn up through that skylight by the aid of an accomplice, and hoisted into a balloon. What's that, Mr. Narkom? How did I know? By using my brains, man, and my eyes as well. There was some sand ballast upon the roof—and sand doesn't usually grow on house tops, does it? And if you didn't succeed in finding traces of a balloon from the neighborhood district there is still a great deal to be done."

"Yes, yes—I found the balloon—it had come down the other side of Croamhurst woods, but absolutely empty, everyone swears to that," struck in the superintendent agitatedly, his eyes on Cleek's face.

Cleek smiled.

"Come Mr. Narkom—to the limousine. We have work before us, and not too much time to do it in."

With that resistless energy so thoroughly characteristic of him he plunged down the stairs followed by Mr. Narkom and the almost dazed Nikolai Paravetch.

"No. 42 Old Bond street, as fast as you can streak it, Lennard," was the order.

It was considerably under half an hour when the limousine drew up panting and throbbing at the curb outside the great furriers known as the Anglo-Russian Fur Stores," and young Paravetch's face took on a mystified look.

"This is where my father used to work—when we first came over from Russia," he said quickly, speaking in an excited tone "they won't know anything about him now!"

But Cleek had swept on—past the great swinging doors—past the inner doors marked "Manager's Room" and on till he reached the room labeled "Work-room," and in which were several benches, filled with furs of animals and all sizes and shapes.

IN one corner of this strangely furnished room, sewing for dear life upon a strip of black fur and clad in a leather apron that covered his knees, sat an old man, heedless of the whispered comments of his fellow workers, seeing nothing, hearing nothing, with his head bent low over his work.

Nikolai gave a sudden cry.

"Father!"

"Niko!—Laddie!—Where—where am I?" he stammered haltingly, and fell forward against the young man's shoulder.

But Cleek made answer for him.

"Quite safe, Mr. Paravetch," said he softly. "Quite safe. How did you come here? Why, you lost your memory, due to an overdose of drugging in that cigar you smoked and your instinct carried you straight back to your old work bench. There!" he whipped out a small bottle from his pocket and shook out something in the palm of his hand. "Swallow that down and it will soon pull you into shape again. That's right. Now a glass of water"——

Cleek endeavored to explain a little of the mystifying circumstances to the manager who had put in an appearance.

"'Pon me soul, I'm sorry to lose him," said that gentleman. "He turned up here this morning, worn and dishevelled, marched over to that table, and the way he buckled down to work made me think I was entertaining angels unawares. As it happened I was short of hands, and so I let him be—the finest worker I've ever met"——

At the door of the drawing room in Clock Manor, Cleek paused.

"I am going to let you go to her—alone," he said quietly, nodding to Nikolai. "Just send Miss Lorne to me please. I have something—important to say to her."

And she came instantly.

Ailsa's eyes went to Cleek's face.

"I heard,' she said softly. "You have something important to say to me, dear?"

"Very important," he said tenderly. "I love you Ailsa." He kissed her hands, then after a silent moment, stepped back and whistled softly to the superintendent.

"Mr. Narkom," said he serenely, "I'm going to take a holiday—a real, proper holiday, away from the 'haunts of men.' And Miss Lorne is coming with me together with Mrs. Condiment—aren't you, Ailsa? Good-bye dear," he added softly, "God bless you. It is good-bye for a short time only, and then"——

Moonshine Oleomargarine Made in Fortresses, With Secret Chambers, Guarded by Women

Thrilling discoveries in the war waged in St. Louis by United States revenue agents against the illicit coloring of butter substitutes

FORTRESSES, fitted with secret closets, hidden stairways, sliding panels and chambers to which there seem to be no doors are the laboratories in which oleomargarine is colored, by moonshiners who would escape the Government tax.

Hunting oleomargarine moonshiners in St. Louis is a business that is not only engrossing the attention of a large staff of Government revenue officers, but it is almost as dangerous and thrilling as was that of chasing whisky moonshiners in the mountains of Kentucky some years ago.

Just at present a special oleo campaign is going on in this city. Expert agents who have cleaned out ilicit manufacturies in other large cities have been especially assigned to the work here. They declare that conditions are worse in St. Louis than in any other important city in the United States and that the moonshiners are defrauding the Government out of $1000 in revenue every single working day.

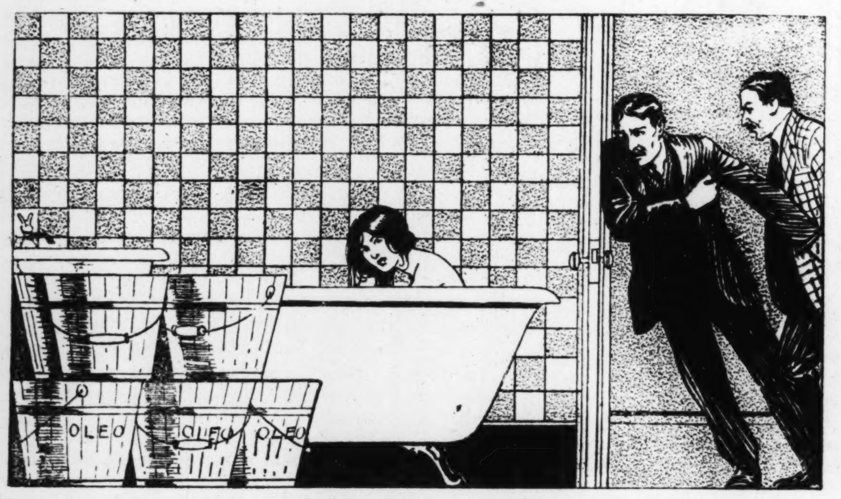
There have been an astonishingly few trials on indictments for this particular violation of the Federal laws. Within the last two years, out of some 30 indictments only about three cases have been heard in court and these all resulted in convictions. Eighteen cases, involving 40 or 50 defendants, are on the criminal docket of the United States District Court here for next January, and a special prosecutor from the Department of Justice at Washington will be here to help handle them.

Moonshining oleo means secretly coloring white oleomargarine yellow and selling it so as to avoid a Government tax of 10 cents a pound. This tax, the revenue officers themselves admit, is almost prohibitive. White oleo can be manufactured and sold at from 13 to 16 cents a pound, of which cost the Government tax is only one-fourth of a cent. When a dealer buys the product uncolored from the manufacturer at 15 cents a pound, and colors it himself, he cannot sell it for less than 25 cents a pound with profit, if he complies with the law. If he sells it for 25 cents, he can make no profit to repay him for his trouble. If he sells it at more than 25 cents, the price brings it within dangerous competition with pure butter.



Revenue agents besieged the bathroom until the moonshiner's wife was compelled to leave it and they found contraband oleo.

If, on the other hand, he can buy it for 15 cents, color it, avoid the tax and then sell it for 25 cents, he will make a most attractive profit. Indeed the chances for his commercial agrandizement are so alluring, that he is willing to take a chance of evading detection, although, if he be caught, he faces the probability of spending a long term in prison.

Ordinarily public sympathy might be expected to be on the moonshiner's side. Good oleomargarine is just as nutritive and almost as desirable as butter. Where the public suffers is from the fact that the moonshiner must work clandestinely and in quarters that would be least suspected by the agents or assailable upon a raid.

The result is that they usually color the stuff in the most unsanitary places. Basements, cellars, attics, holes in the ground, walled-in places where the light of the sun never penetrates, fetid, filthy, unspeakably foul and dirty. The writer visited a moonshiner's den where the walls were slimy from moisture, the floor damp, the utensils greasy and unclean and a basement, to which an open shaft led a few feet below, was partly filled with stagnant, greenish ill-smelling water.

The house man here complained that the place was so full of mosquitoes he could scarcely sleep at night. This man, by the way, was positively picturesque because of his own personal uncleanliness. The revenue officers declared that this place supplied several downtown restaurants and many West End residences with oleomargarine at 25 cents a pound.

The plant itself resembled a fortress. It was in an obscure building in a deserted neighborhood. The front part of it was a living room for the house man. Its furniture consisted principally of a cot and a wooden washstand with several dirty, kerosene lamps. Under the cot were a dozen or more emptied whisky bottles.

The back partition of this room was of rough oak boards, nailed diagonally to heavy timbers, with a steel grille as a middle layer and an inner layer of boards in counter diagonals to the lines of the outer layer. The only door was about six inches thick, fitted into the wall as snugly as the door of a steel safe. It could be locked and further protected from the inside by steel cross beams at top, center and bottom.

Inside the partition was a foul little room with two inside doors. One of these led into a warehouse for storing uncolored oleo. The other led into the mixing rooms and was in two parts. The outer resembled the door just described. The inner was a steel barred door such as is used in jails. The two doors turned on hinges in opposite directions so that it would be almost impossible to batter them down.

The mixing rooms were in reality two small cells, with walls so solid and reinforced with steel as to make it impossible to pierce them with a brace and bit to get a peep hole. The inside room or "holy of holies," as it was called by a detective, was shut off from the other by another door similar to the first one. A fireman said it would take a whole company more than an hour to break into this last room where, the revenue agents say, the coloring operations proper were carried on.

Even this was not considered sufficient protection. The shaft in the floor made it possible, in the event of a raid, to conceal all evidence of illegal operations by dropping contraband material into the filthy waters of the basement. The revenue officers said the place had defied them for months before they could get sufficient evidence to warrant an indictment. The laws are very strictly interpreted and conclusive testimony must be brought in before a moonshiner can be convicted in court.

At first appearance it would seem no very difficult task to catch up with the offenders. They are compelled to buy their white oleo and coloring matter from factories which must keep records of the sales. From the nature of the business, the revenue agents assume that any man who buys much of white oleo intends to color it and sell it without paying the tax. Yet although they know the man has it, they are very often unable to get proof of actual operations.

Middle door in two sections, one of heavy oak swinging outward and the other, a steel grille, swinging inward.

Some of the operators are very daring. It is said that one or two St. Louis offenders have been known to order fresh batches of the raw material within an hour or two after they had been released on bond following a raid. Of course the profits on the business done on a large scale are enormous. Many moonshiners have two or three secret places and, as soon as one is known to be under suspicion, they move to another.

Some of them do not mind the presence of revenue agents at their plants when they are not actually coloring. They have tubs more or less full of colored oleo bearing proper stamps to show the tax has been paid on the contents. Under the law, they are not required to cancel a stamp until a tub is empty. So they can keep filling and refilling the same tub until they are caught in the act.

The men in charge of the St. Louis campaign today have won laurels in similar campaigns elsewhere. Chief Agent Nutt, after years of labor, made oleo moonshining so unprofitable in Pittsburg that the business there has virtually been stamped out. His first assistant, Col. C. H. Ingram, was for many years in charge of the Chicago office. Chicago was then the worst city. At the beginning of the war, Chicago had 700 dealers in colored oleo, but at its finish there were only 20 in the entire city. United States District Judge Landis was extremely severe upon convicted offenders, sentencing them to long terms in prison.

Raiding suspected oleo dens is not only very difficult, but it is often dangerous. Several years ago revenue officers broke into a place in St. Louis upon what they believed was conclusive evidence of unlawful operations. The owner of the place shot one of them and was himself shot, both men being severely wounded and both recovering. The owner declared later that he thought the officers were robbers and fired to defend his life. He was not prosecuted because the raiders failed to find any conclusive evidence of moonshining.

The operators frequently display the greatest ingenuity in concealing their operations. One place had long been suspected but frequent visits failed to reveal anything like proof. Finally an officer noticed a hinge in the landing of a stairway, which led to the basement of the house, a private residence. Upon further examination it was found that the stairway was so cunningly built that it could be folded up in sections, disclosing a room in which there were large quantities of colored and white oleo and oleo in process of coloring.

Secret closets are greatly favored by the moonshiners. The detectives have found some marvelously constructed false floors and false partitions. Frequently a harmless looking cabinet with medicine bottles on its shelves is nothing but a door to a secret recess.

In one place a brick wall between two buildings had been removed and the space had been utilized by building a partition of boards, one section of which was removable. This left space for secretion of 20 to 30 60-pound tubs of oleo. Although the place had been measured many times, the agents had overlooked the closet because they had made the natural allowance for the thickness of the two brick walls.

The officers found one place which had been used as a stable, where the doors and windows of the first floor had been closed with two-inch oak planks, spiked to heavy timbers. The outer door was supplemented by a heavy sliding door which dropped in such a way as also to close an entrance to a stairway. At the top of the stairway was still another door that could be braced from above and below.

Beyond this was still another door, fastened with heavy oak timbers that were set into stirrups made of steel wagon tires. It would have taken a good two hours to break into the factory with axes and crow bars and by that time the operators could have destroyed all incriminating evidence.

A complete moonshine plant was found in a stable on Bell avenue. Entrance to the stable loft had been barricaded until it would have been difficult to carry tell me that you are mercenary—a woman with a big heart like yours."

"I'm not mercenary exactly; I loathe money as money, but I like nice things. I have to have them. I'm trying to be honest with myself and with you—in time—before it's too late. It's hard; but I didn't arrange the world, did I? I didn't choose my own soul, did I? But I've got to get along with what was given me, haven't I? I tell you I'd ruin your life, Harvey. You'd divorce me in a year."

"Don't talk like that, or you will ruin your own life! There's a big tragedy in store for you, Persis, unless you"——

She was so tortured with disillusion and with the death of her first romance that she grew very hard.

"Well, so long as it isn't the tragedy of being unable to pay my bills and of eating my own cooking I can stand it. I'd rather be unhappy than shabby. But it's growing late; we must get back."

He aided her to her feet, untied the horses, and offered her his hand for a mounting block. But she said:

"We can walk quicker here than we can ride." Taking her bridle in her arm, she set out swiftly. She seemed once more to be running away from something—a shadow of poverty, no doubt. He felt unspeakably sorry for her. Again he was about to offer her back her heart when an abrupt light broke over her face. She paused, laughed, turned to him.

"What a fool I am! My father set my sister up in business as a British peeress and bought her her husband and settled a whacking dower on her. He can do the same for me and keep the money in this country—and get me a real husband. He could give me enough for us both to live on comfortably."

"I reckon I could hardly accept that arrangement," Forbes said, as gently as he might.

"You see!" she cried out. "You expect me to murder my pride and accept poverty, but you won't accept wealth because you must keep your pride. You couldn't object to my having the money to spend on myself, could you?"

"No, I could hardly object to that," he said.

"Well, then, if everything goes right with my father's plans we'll have love and money and all. It will be wonderful—heaven on earth! Kiss me!"

She put up her lips, and he kissed them and found them bitter-sweet. Then she strode on with a lilting joy, humming a song and putting her horse to his paces to keep up with her. Forbes remembered what Senator Tait had said of her father's impending doom, and her rapture was a heartbreak to him—a final irony.

At first she had felt infinitely sorry for Forbes and indignant only at the fate that made him poor. As she rode her fretful horse she began to feel infinitely sorry for herself and indignant at Forbes. He had permitted her to think he had ample means. He had encouraged her to love him seriously. Her resentment was the fierce resentment people feel when those they love and idolize do not live up to the standards set for them.

She tried to mask her anger under an unusually cheerful manner. She spoke with approval of the landscape, chattered vivaciously about everything, and all the while was burning with resentment. It was small wonder that Forbes felt the blight of her wrath, when the very horses knew of it. The most determined politeness can never imitate the fine flower and bouquet of genuine enthusiasm. But what could Forbes say to set things right? The one effective speech would have been a declaration of independent means, a smiling disclaimer of poverty: "I was only joking; I am really very rich."

That would have re-established the entente. But that was the one thing Forbes could not say. He rode on at Persis' side, a silent and dejected prisoner of circumstances, a spy captured in the enemy's camp in the enemy's uniform.

Eventually they reached the Enslee place—the mountain that was Enslee's, with the stately pleasure dome he had decreed there. The majesty of it belittled Forbes still more. The beauty of it shamed him.

Forbes saw how good it was, and coveted it. But it was as if Naboth, the soldier, had envied David, the King, his garden. Persis also saw how good it was, and she could possess it all, become the chatelaine of this place.

She spoke her thought aloud:

"It's this sort of thing, Harvey, that I love and need—beautiful things and plenty of them."

"I understand," Forbes groaned.

"If only you could get them for us!"

"If only I could!"

She would have put out her hand to comfort him, but she saw above them Willie Enslee leaning across the balustrade. She lifted her horse into a jog-trot, and they rode into the court, where a chauffeur waited to take the horses to the stable.

"We got off the main road," Persis said, as she climbed the steps, followed by Forbes, "and the horses were tired and"——

"I was awfully anxious. I was about to start out to look for you."

"There was no occasion to be anxious."

"Besides, your father telephoned you."

"My father! Is he back in New York?"

"No; he telephoned from Chicago. He was just leaving on the 20-hour train. He couldn't wait till you got back."

"What did he have to say?"

"Lots." Willie looked uneasily at Forbes, as if he were in the way.

"I'll be changing for dinner," Forbes said, with uncomfortable haste.

"You'd better be cooking the dinner," Willie said. "Winifred is counting on your soldierly experience to help her out."

So Forbes went to the kitchen to salute and report for duty. As he entered the house he looked back to see Enslee leading Persis toward the marble steps to the little temple where he proposed regularly.

Come and Spend a Day on the Moon

cano. The Abbe informs us that the volcano idea is an error. The circular rampart, resembling the barriers of a terrestrial volcano, led it to be considered as such, but the author informs us it is in reality merely a round barrier of cliffs, surrounding a vast stony plain.

At one time this plain and others like it were thought by observers to be seas and many of them were actually named as the ocean-that, the sea-this. It may be that in the beginning some sublunal eruption of gases threw the plain and its ramparts up into the volcano shape, but that is the only analogy to volcanic formations as they are observed on the earth.

As we stand on the wall of Copernicus, towering some 13,000 feet above the plain it surrounds, we can look straight across an abyss 50 miles wide. "An attentive observer," says the Abbe, "might pass all his life studying Copernicus. He would every day find new details in it."

Big as is this engirdled plain, it is much smaller than others on the surface of the moon. Not far from it are Petavius, Manginus and Lagrange, each of which is 100 miles from one side to the other. Gauss is still larger, with its 100-mile diameter, while all of these are dwarfed by the gigantic circles of Maurolycus, of which the mean diameter is 150 miles.

The St. Louisan who would get some idea of the great dimensions of Maurolycus can do so rather easily by comparing it with the topography of his own city and its surrounding territory. Suppose Maurolycus could be turned upside down over St. Louis like an inverted cup, the exact center of which was at the old Courthouse. Within the majestic ring would be all St. Louis, St. Charles, Lincoln, Warren, Ste. Genevieve, Jefferson, Washington, Franklin and parts of Pike, Ralls, Montgomery, Gasconade, Crawford, Iron, Madison, Cape Girardeau and Perry counties, Missouri; all of Calhoun, Jersey, Green, Macoupin, Montgomery, Madison, Bond, Clinton, St. Clair, Washington, Monroe, Randolph, Pew and parts of Pike, Scott, Morgan, Sangamon, Christian, Shelby, Fayette, Marion, Jefferson, Franklin and Jackson counties, Illinois.

In other words, the circle of Maurolycus, if centered at St. Louis, would embrace a territory containing several millions of population and including such Missouri and Illinois cities as Hillsboro, De Soto, Farmington, Perryville, Ironton, Washington, Hermann, Warrenton, Louisiana, Clarksville, Bowling Green, Ellsberry, Montgomery City, Troy and St. Charles on the western side of the Mississippi, and, on the eastern, the cities of Winchester, Jacksonville, Vandalia, Centralia, Mount Vernon, Duquoin, Murphysboro, Litchfield, Sparta, Chester, Carlinville, Carrollton, Whitehall, Staunton, Edwardsville and Belleville, with Springfield only a mile or so outside the ring.

Yet this is only one of three equally large "craters" on the same side of the moon. There are scores of others but little smaller, while it is probable that upon the side of the moon never visible from the earth there are others of equal magnitude.

We learn that everything is much slower on the moon than on the earth. The satellite turns on its axis about 28 times slower than the earth, so its days and nights are each 354 hours long. The nights are bitterly cold, because there is no atmosphere to cloak it as the earth has and the sun is so long away at a time. Obversely, the days are fearfully hot, because the sun beats upon it uninterruptedly for so long and there is no envelope of air to temper the heat.

Because there is nothing to check all the light rays, the glare of sunshine gives off a blueish effulgence. All objects have their own colors, but all the colors are more or less tinged with blue. Up there the expression "once in a blue moon," would literally mean nothing at all.

"Cast your eyes," says the Abbe, "over and beyond these frightful precipices, those steep declivities broken only by two or three terrace-like slopes of debris, and what presents itself to your dazzled eyes is above all a spectacle of the most awful desolation. There is not a patch of moss, not a heath-grown ledge, to soften the rocky ridges and sharp-cut edges of these abrupt surfaces; not even the lowest form of plant life, not a lichen to attenuate the wild aspect of the landscape and give it even the slightest appearance of life. * * * It is not even a dream of death, but it is the vision of a world where life has never existed."

What is true of the appearance of the moon may, in a million or so of years, the author thinks, be true of the earth also. Here is his imaginative picture of our planet:

"The earth's atmosphere exists no longer. The rocks the minerals and calcareous compounds have absorbed it little by little. The waters of the oceans have permeated the underlying strata, and the cold of interplanetary space has frozen up the last traces of moisture. On the desert ground no crop any longer ripens. At the beginning of this slow but continuous cooling down of the earth, the human race in a body had taken refuge in the equatorial zone, where a dwarfed vegetation had replaced the abundant flora of the tropics.

"Some millions of years more and only a vegetation like that of the polar regions could withstand the glacial climate. One by one most species of animals had become extinct. To hold out somewhat longer, the last families of the human race dug into shafts and deep-lying underground tunnels, and it is there in the last of these catacombs their frozen bones are now lying."

By this time, he continues, every trace of organic life would have disappeared. Our monuments, our powerful machines, all the products of our industry and civilization, would have been reduced to dust and "not one particle would remain to reveal the previous existence of life on our planet."

Moreux points out that with a telescope magnifying 300 diameters the eye can catch any object on the moon measuring 197 yards. With one of 600 diameters one can perceive an object measuring 98 1-2 yards. With a machine of 2000 diameters we might see anything 29 1-2 inches long, although, unfortunately, in this magnitude all sense of detail is lost. The best practical instrument thus far devised has a magnifying power of 400 diameters.

From our starting point on the circle of Copernicus we must go northward because we cannot hope to cross the enormous gorges and frightful precipices to the south. We find that we can move with far greater rapidity than on the earth, because the attraction of gravitation is so much less. What would weigh 20 pounds in spring balances on the moon would weigh 100 pounds on the earth, and a jump that would take us 6 feet here would take us 36 feet there. This will help us immensely in traversing the broken country. We can jump about like human grasshoppers.

So we once more make our little hop of 238,833 miles and land safely back in St. Louis.

Moonshine Oleomargarine Fortresses in St. Louis

the place by storm. Indeed several fruitless raids were made, the revenuers finding nothing incriminating after they had gotten into the upper room. Finally, however, they discovered that a false partition had been put into one end of the loft in such a way as to appear part of the wall of the building. Shelves and electric lights were fastened to it as it had never been disturbed. A door was cleverly concealed behind a heavy table. In the recess between the true and false walls the officers found a great quantity of contraband stuff.

Officers who raided a suspected place on Morgan street after breaking in with great difficulty were compelled to kill three ferocious bull dogs which attacked them. The stairway leading to the second floor was also barricaded and the obstructions had to be battered down. On the second floor was another false partition similar to that in the Bell avenue place. The attic above had been lined with heavy paper so that the glow of electric lights could not be seen from without. A block and tackle working through a trap door lifted material into the attic. Another big consignment of illegal oleo was seized in this place.

The detectives for a long time tried to capture a moonshine plant in a Pine street building but always failed to find anything recriminating. Finally they took to watching the owner's residence and captured a moonshine plant in full operation in the basement of the home.

One alleged moonshiner's residence was searched without result until the revenuers stumbled upon several boxes of contraband stuff behind the piano in a parlor. Another used his bathroom for a hiding place and his wife would always be taking a bath when the revenuers were around. They finally became suspicious and besieged the bathroom until she was forced to leave it and then they found the stuff.

Women very often help their husbands in the illegal business. One of them was in the habit of inviting in the neighbors to a party and entertaining them with music and feasting while her husband and brother were coloring oleo in the basement. Another woman became hysterical against what she protested was an unwarranted intrusion in her home and almost convinced the detectives they had made a mistake until one of them stumbled upon contraband stuff hidden in the soiled clothes basket. The officers declare she forgot her tears, when all had been discovered, and cursed them roundly.

A rather amusing story is told on two revenue agents. They had followed a one-horse wagon to a house on Rutger street, where they found the dealer unloading oleo at a store. They seized the stuff and commandeered the rig to take it to the Federal Building. On the way one of them had the happy thought that, if they would give the horse its head, it would take them home and they might find the moonshine plant. Their hopes grew higher and higher as the animal weaved along through cross streets in a general westerly direction. When it walked right into a wall, however, they made an examination and discovered that the horse was totally blind.

The finest oleo moonshine plant ever discovered, in the opinion of Chief Agent Nutt, was at Pittsburg. Here a wealthy citizen was under suspicion and shipments of uncolored oleo had been traced to his mansion in an exclusive residence district. The most determined search, however, failed to reveal anything.

The house stood on a wide street and had a 60-foot asphalt alley behind it. One day an agent discovered a hinge in a basement stairway. Lifting a section of the woodwork he discovered the mouth of a tunnel. The tunnel led into a room 20 feet square under the alley and filled with the best electrically operated machinery for coloring oleo. Its excavator had been an expert and had so trussed the roof of the underground room that the heaviest wagons might be driven through the alley without breaking through. In this place many thousands of dollars worth of untaxed oleo could be prepared each day.

Disposing of the oleo after it has been colored is a simple matter. The manufacturer is usually a man of good appearance and some standing in his neighborhood, while the actual work is usually done by some employe. All that is necessary is to keep the stuff in containers bearing an uncanceled revenue stamp. It is taken from this, put into pound-blocks, carefully wrapped and stamped "oleomargarine." The dealer disposes of it in large lots to customers. Often he peddles it from house to house.

Any housewife, if she would take a little trouble, could color her own oleo and get not only a cheaper, but an unquestionably clean article. She can buy white oleo from the manufacturers in tubs of from 10 to 60 pounds. It is strictly clean and the manufacturers will give her enough coloring matter to tint it to the shade she desires.

There is no law to prevent her from doing this, provided she sells none of it and provided she is supplying it for her own household and is not running a boarding house. The coloring is a very simple operation that can be performed in a few minutes on the kitchen stove. Oleo in winter will keep much longer than butter without ice.

Thus, at a few minutes' trouble a woman can save at least $1 on every 10 pounds of oleo she buys and can be sure that what she is giving her family to eat is pure, wholesome and nutritive.

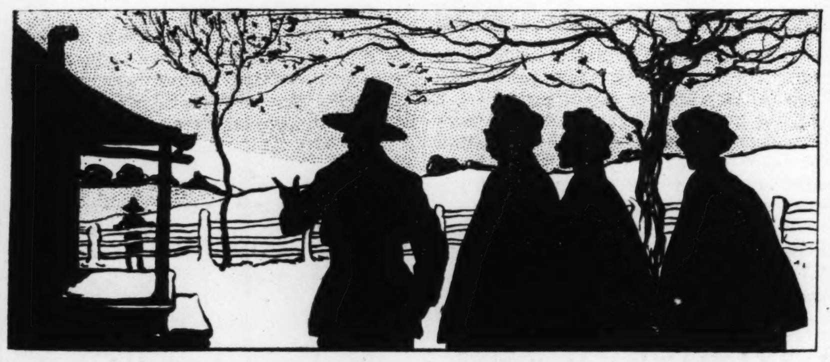
ST. LOUIS WOMAN PRIZE-WINNING "MOVIE" PLAYWRIGHT

Third award in big competition goes to Miss Caroline B. Wells, who never before had a photoplay accepted ☙ Found plot of her camera comedy, "A Puritan's Conscience," while studying patterns in a red rug

MISS CAROLINE B. WELLS.

IT looks much like any other rug—some 10 feet square in dimensions, garish red in color, variegated with brown scroll patterns—as it lies on the floor of a little studio at 2708 South Eleventh street, St. Louis. But Miss Caroline Benbrooke Wells, for one, is firmly convinced that this is the magic carpet on which she was transported afar to fame as a prize winner in a moving picture scenario contest, recently adjudged.

While marching back and forth across the rug, her eyes intently poring upon its cabalistic designs, Miss Wells caught, as if in a flash, the plot which enabled her, who had never had a photoplay produced, to triumph in a competition in which she had 3645 rivals, some of them veteran authors and prize takers in that field. In this host of manuscripts, that contributed by the St. Louis novice proved to stand third. By the narrowest of margins, the first and second prizes went to photoplay writers of established reputation—the first of Roy L. McCardell of the New York World and Post-Dispatch staff, and the second to Miss Elaine Sterne of New York.



Villagers are much perturbed by arrival of Puritan White, his wife and three daughters in outlandish costume.

How very narrow that margin was—how extremely close Miss Wells' fairy carpet came to bearing her into the haven of the first prize itself—may be learned from the following pronouncement of the judges:

"Illustrative of the worth of the three prize-winning scripts, it may be said that on points, by which the judges made their decision, Mr. McCardell received 98, Miss Sterne 97 and Miss Wells 96—perfect score being 100. It took the judges three days of constant discussion to decide between the three. Point by point the scenarios were considered and reconsidered. It was the sitting of a jury, ballot after ballot being taken to arrive at a unanimous decision. On the nineteenth ballot the jury was unanimous, and the awards were made as before stated."

Miss Wells' camera comedy, culled from the intricacies of the scroll patterns of her rug, is entitled "A Puritan's Conscience." Unconsciously testifying to the efficacy of the wondrous carpet as a source of inspiration, the judges continue:

"'A Puritan's Conscience,' by Miss Wells, is unique. The author has conceived a story of remarkable situations, quaint and yet of convincing interest. Unlike Mr. McCardell and Miss Sterne, she has taken an inherited scruple for the basis of her play, rather than a living circumstance around which to build her story.

"It is hailed as one of the cleverest moving picture comedies yet produced, and will establish Miss Wells as a writer of comedies among the millions of moving picture patrons who will view her work."

The contest, said to have been the largest of its kind ever conducted, was promoted by a New York newspaper and by a well-known firm of film manufacturers The prizes have just been awarded—$1000 to McCardell, $500 to Miss Sterne and $250 to Miss Wells. It is true that the difference between $1000 and $250 is considerable, but one must remember that McCardell defeated Miss Wells by only two points out of 100.

Miss Wells' agreement under the terms of the contest make it impossible to give a complete resume of her successful photoplay, only a sketch, outlining its possibilities, being available:

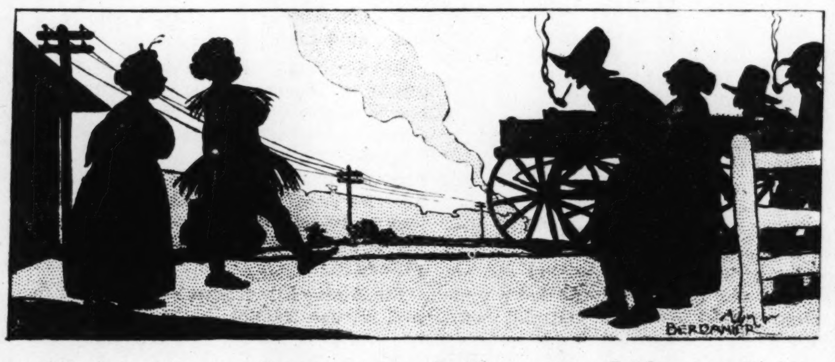
Puritan and Purity White are children of Massachusetts parents, whose ancestors came over in the Mayflower, and are reared according to the strictest tenets of the Roundheads.

They separate in childhood and Puritan White comes to St. Louis to seek his fortune. In 25 years he acquires several millions, and in the process loses practically all of his Puritan veneer. He becomes, indeed, worldly and fashionable, his wife, his two daughters and his son becoming prominent in society.

Purity White also marries and is now a wealthy widow with a grown daughter. She, too, has gradually sloughed off the Puritan skin and is as worldly a dowager as the Back Bay can furnish. These changes in point of view have been religiously concealed from each other by the brother and sister.

Puritan White is horrified at receiving a letter from his sister stating her intention of visiting him, as they have not seen each other for a quarter of a century. There is a hasty conference of the St. Louis family. It will never, never do for Purity to find her relatives living unrighteously in a mansion, lackeyed by a crowd of servants, indulging in the modern dances and all the gay frivolities of society. So they precipitately hire a little cottage in a suburb of St. Louis which the author charitably conceals under the name of "Squashville," and betake themselves thither, without servants. Still further to carry on the deception, they don costumes worn in the days of Miles Standish and of Priscilla Mullins, who was faint-heartedly beloved of John Alden.

On her side, Purity and her daughter are just as anxious to conceal their worldliness from what they believe to be the austere eyes of their St. Louis kindred, and are also dressed in Puritan costume when they arrive at Squashville. Each side is convinced that it is successfully duping the other, and the farcical complications arising may be imagined.



Dinah arrives as a Congo savage; Bridget, as an Irish peasant.

To name one of them, the denizens of Squashville, perceiving the advent of Puritan White and his wife and daughters in outlandish attire, can make nothing of the prodigy unless it be that the party is a Mormon elder and his three wives. When Purity and her daughter, in the same garb, appear, the village gasps: "Two more wives!"

A still worse shock is due for the rustic sensibilities. The cottage's cookery not prospering, White sends into St. Louis for his negro cook, Dinah, and also summons the Hibernian laundress, Bridget. He instructs them to come in "ancestral attire," meaning that of his own ancestors. They blunder, quite excusably, and turn up in Squashville in literal obediance—Dinah as a Congo savage and Bridget as an Irish peasant. "Two more wives—seven in all—and one of them black at that!" shudders Squashville.

It is high time for a sanctified village to assert itself, and presently White and his family, with his sister and niece, find themselves in the Squashville calaboose. It is a fine pickle for descendants of Puritans—to be haled behind the bars as menaces to public morality. The double deception is revealed, and soon all are installed in the big St. Louis mansion, where they reflect, more or less logically: "Though we be worldly and wealthy, we need not be wicked so long as we possess a Puritan's conscience."

Miss Wells' success comes to her as the first reward of two years' hard work. During that time, wearing paths in the nap of her rug, as she tramped to and fro, she has written movie play after play, none of which was ever accepted prior to the prize winner. But she was not discouraged, sensibly aware that a beginner must learn the technique of photoplay writing through long and hard labor; and after each reverse merely scrutinized a little more intently the patterns of her magic carpet before trying again.

She lives at 6017 Etzel avenue, but keeps a studio in South Eleventh street for the sake of quiet. She is a daughter of the late Hasten Wells, a pioneer St. Louis business man. She was christened May Caroline Wells, but to avoid confusion with Carolyn Wells, writer of favorably known nonsense verses, introduced between her Christian name and her surname the name "Benbrooke," one which had been in her family.

Miss Wells yielded two points and one point to no common rivals when the first and second prizes went to McCardell and Miss Sterne. The former has, since 1890, written and had filmed more than 1000 photo dramas, and has been a redoubtable winner of prizes in contests such as this. Miss Sterne's first scenario was accepted a year ago, and she has since won first and second prizes in other photoplay contests, besides winning a prize in a magazine short-story competition. Since the results of the contest were announced, Miss Wells has received numerous letters from film manufacturers requesting her to submit manuscripts, and she now considers her fortune made in the field of camera drama. She will continue to study patterns of the rug which carried her to her first success.

Uncle Sam's Diving Torpedo Boat, Latest Submarine Marvel

AMERICAN readers who have been amazed at the wonderful efficiency of submarines in the present European war, and who have got into the habit of shaking their heads in doubt whenever someone has asked how our own warships will compare with those of the belligerents, should be cheered by the latest naval news from Washington.

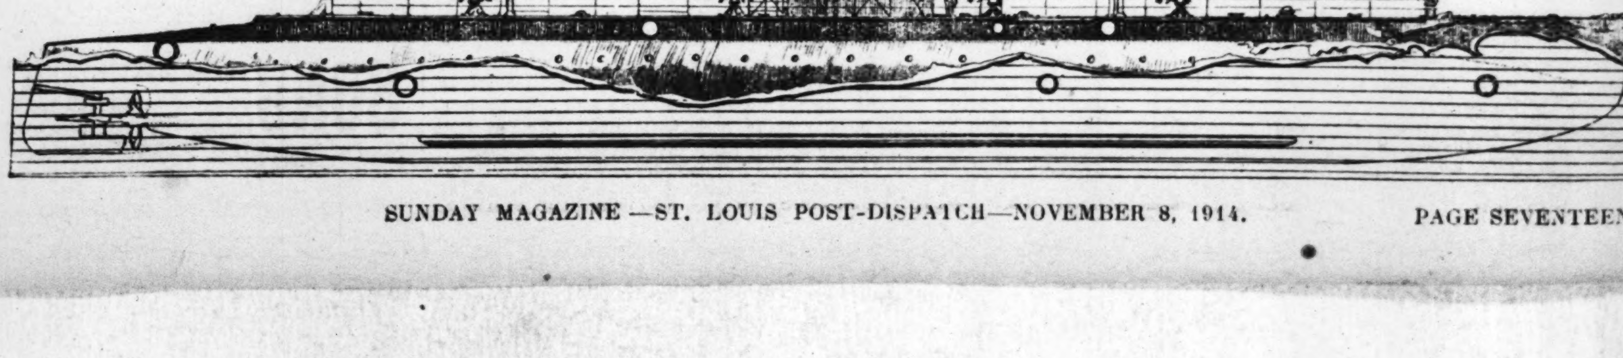
Backed by the authority of Secretary of the Navy Daniels, the announcement comes that the United States is preparing the deadliest small warship ever built. It is a torpedo boat and a submarine combined, yet it is more powerful than any torpedo-boat destroyer.

The details of its construction are, of course, a secret; but the Navy Department is so satisfied that it has been willing to spend some $1,300,000 to build it.

From all that can be learned, the new terror will be 300 feet long, will have 12 torpedo tubes and will mount rapid-fire guns. It will have a range of 5000 miles without recoaling and will be able to make a trip from New York to Liverpool without having to take on supplies. It will be as speedy as the biggest battleship and available for scout duty with a fleet. Submerged, it will be far faster and more powerful than any under-water boat in existence. It can fight as effectively on the surface as when below and will carry a crew of twenty-five or thirty men in comfort, when it is submerged for a longer time than any existing submarine can remain below.

It is really a diving torpedo-boat destroyer and the Navy Department thinks well of it. Secretary Daniels, in a recent letter, said:

> "While the policy of our own and foreign natives is to keep secret the characteristics of all war craft, and particularly so in the case of submarines, I feel warranted in stating that this sea-going submarine will excel any foreign submarine so far projected."



NOVEL THINGS WORTH KNOWING

Adenoid Growths the Cause of Enlarged Neck Glands

SEVENTY-FIVE per cent of the swollen neck glands, so common among children, can be cured without operation, and so without leaving that hideous scar which remains through out life, according to Dr. Nathan P. Stauffer of Blockley Hospital, Philadelphia.

These swollen glands are the result of neglect of adenoid growths, enlarged tonsils and bad teeth. They are caused by infection. The glands in the neck are part of the lymphatic system that extends throughout the body, furnishing the lymph that bathes every organ, every cell. In the words of Dr. Stauffer: "The word lymphatics is derived from 'lympha,' meaning water. A lymphatic, previous to entering a gland, divides into smaller branches of afferent vessels as a water carrier. On emerging from this gland, there is another plexus formed, called efferent vessels. Gray divides the glands of the head and neck into the superficial and deep lymphatics, further subdividing them according to their location. All these glands drain into the lymphatic glands of the neck, where they further divide into the superficial and deep cervical groups. These glands drain immediately into the thoracic duct as it empties into the large innominate vein at the root of the neck, whence the circulation of the lymph is carried to the heart and lungs."

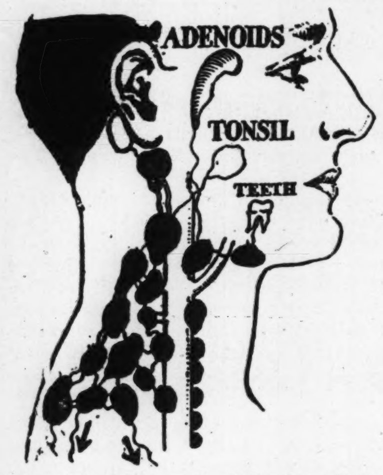


Diagram showing how the lymphatics of the adenoids, tonsils, ears and teeth drain into the neck glands.

Through these glands infection, especially tuberculous, may reach the lungs even more easily than through the air passages. "These cervical glands are acting sentinels (or forts) lying under or below the adenoids, tonsils, teeth and ears, and their duty is immediately to try to repel or destroy any invading host. If unable, they call upon the body for reinforcements, whereupon the gland enlarges. If the invading host is more powerful, the gland supperates."

Adenoids were not discovered until recently, but ancient pictures show that they are no new disease. For example, the portrait of Emperor Ferdinand I of Germany, painted more than 400 years ago, by the great Dutch artist, Lucas of Leyden, now in the gallery of Florence, is typical of an adenoid face. The original was a mouth-breather, through his nasal passages being obstructed by adenoid growths.

Adenoids become enlarged through irritation and then inflammation. Children snuffle instead of blowing their noses when they have colds in the head, consequently the nasal discharges are retained, engorging the bones and tissues and further blocking the passages.

If they are not removed they establish a habit of mouth-breathing and the neck glands become infected.

Dr. Stauffer relates that after noticing the connection between neck glands and swollen tonsils and adenoids he determined to take his next case of a child with inflamed glands and operate on the adenoids alone and watch the result.

Soon afterward a patient was brought to him with glands the size of a peach stone, and hard; a mouth-breather, with enlarged tonsils and afflicted with terrors in the dark. He removed the adenoids and tonsils, whereupon the glands became smaller, and now, four years later, the boy is healthy and robust. Since then he has found it sufficient to pursue the same course whenever the glands have not reached the suppurating stage.

"Adenoid patients," says Dr. Stauffer, "are mouth-breathers and usually have trouble with their teeth, either early or late in life." Nasal obstruction is a common cause of contracted palates and malocclusion. This again causes adenoid growth.

The ears also need attention at the first sign of trouble. For if the discharge be not stopped the neck glands will become affected; the child will be dull mentally, easily exhausted and finally will become deaf.

To secure permanent cure Dr. Stauffer advises:

"1. Early cleansing of nose, teeth and ears.

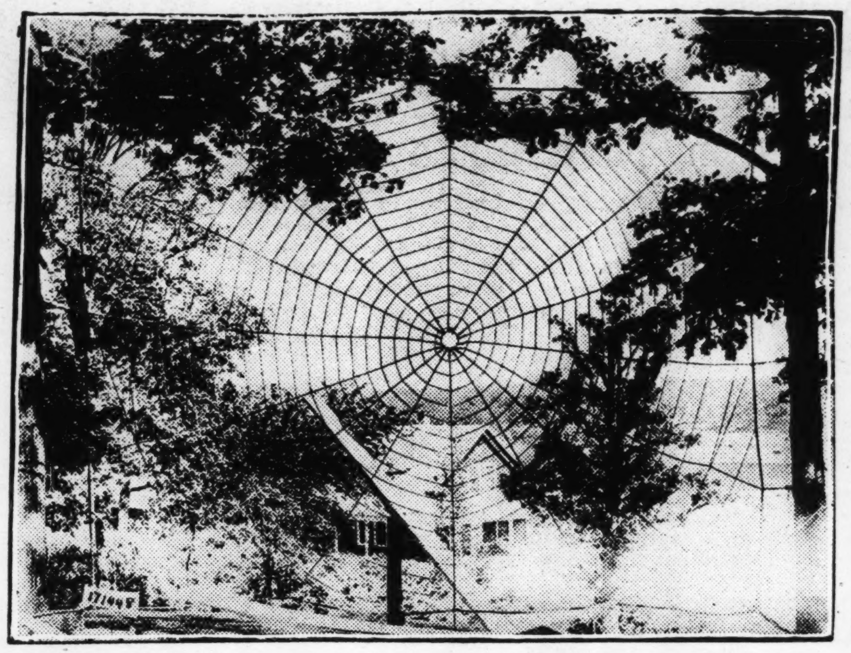
"2. Early removal of adenoids and tonsils by complete dissection

"3. Early adjustment of irregular teeth or removal of decayed roots.

"4. Early mastoid operation for any purulent otitis media present.

"5. Plenty of good food, regular baths, exercise and plenty of sleep. These children with enlarged glands are being poisoned by the toxins from the lymphatic glands. Their adenoids and tonsils block the air supply from their lungs and deprive them of oxygen. It is essential to the growing child to have plenty of fresh air, day and night."

The World's Largest Spider Web Was Man-Made



THE world's largest spider web stands on the lawn of a Chicago man's country home and is of such tremendous size as to startle the passer-by when first he sees it. The immense web is not the work of a spider, but is the result of a man's attempt to see how closely he could reproduce a spider's web with rope. Selecting two immense trees on the lawn of his home, he spun between them this spider's web forty by sixty feet and made it so strong that a boy or man can easily climb to the center or top of it. The web faces the main thoroughfare which passes the house and as a country decoration is a most fascinating one. The spinner could not attain the minuteness of the actual spider's work, but came so near to it that the illusion is almost perfect. The uniqueness of the undertaking catches and fascinates every eye which sees it.

Why Death Is a Matter of No Importance to Savages

THE difference between a "savage" and a civilized man is an unbridgable gulf, according to Sir Everard im Thurn, former Governor of Fiji, whose lifetime of experience among savage and semi-savage peoples gives him the right to speak with authority, as he did at the Australian meeting of the British Association.

The primitive Fijian, for example, took things as they came, asking few questions about the how, the whence and the why. The world in which he lived was limitless, even though he could see only a small part of it. His ancestors were out of sight, but none the less existent, and even he, in what we should call his dreams, but which were to him as real as everything else, went beyond the line and always returned home again. He was a spiritualist. Death to him was nothing. He had no definite "beliefs," he had no religion, but he knew that the essential part of himself was separable from the body, was untrammeled by time and space. Death then, was no break in his continuity, and it was therefore a matter of indifference to him when, where or how it came. He had no idea of a spiritual body that did not or could not associate itself with some human, animal or other material body.

Other beings differed from himself only in the unimportant matter of bodily form, and it seemed to him easy for these to pass from one body to another. They were "souls," only "temporarily and more or less loosely attached to the particular material forms in which they happened to manifest themselves," and these forms mattered little or nothing.

The uncivilized man acted only for his personal interests. He could imagine no others. "To him all that we should class as goods and chattels, his land, or even his own body, was his only so long as he could retain it. He might, if he could and would, take any such property from another entirely without impropriety; nor would he resist, or even wish to resist, the taking from himself of any such property by anyone who could and would take it."

He was kind to strangers if he was afraid of them or if they could be of use to him. When familiarity bred contempt he killed them as nuisances. If he dreaded a white man before he killed him, he dreaded him just as much after he was dead. The victim survived as long as he was remembered. Capt. Cook, for example, survives still among the Fijians.

Sir Everard im Thurn believes that the real savage cannot be civilized except by a process lasting through many generations.

Why Hens Stop Laying in Winter

THAT hens stop laying as winter progresses is a fact known to every farmer and chicken fancier; also, indirectly, to every housewife through the rise in the price of eggs. The reason is explained by the Revue Scientifique, which says that the egg-producing organs degenerate through too much fat. This condition is the consequence of too great abundance of food during the winter, coupled with lack of exercise, due to the narrow limits of the ordinary chicken-run.

The fat invades the liver and piles up in the heart; the blood becomes sluggish and the lungs do not take up enough oxygen to insure combustion of the fat.

"The obvious remedy," says the Scientific American, "is to give less food to hens which stop laying." Mr. Brochemin, in an article in L'Acclimatation, advises that starchy foods, such as corn, rice and barley, be limited, while an abundance of such green food as cabbage, boiled clover, sorrel, etc., be given. Also the hens must be made to take exercise, by giving them a large run and by mixing their food with straw, etc., so that they will have to work for their food.

Making Deserts Fruitful Fields

NATURE has set up four kinds of barriers to man's conquest of the earth—mountains, forests, deserts, rivers. The first he cannot remove; so he bores holes through them for his railways. The second he has, most unwisely, largely cleared away altogether. The third he is beginning to treat like the forests. The fourth he is shifting to suit his purposes and to regulate their flow at will.

Man flies now over all boundaries. He cuts through isthmuses to remove the barriers between the seas.

Into the deserts man sends railroads, telegraph lines, irrigation engineers. The "Great American Desert" marked upon the atlases of our fathers has ceased to exist. The vast "desert" of Northwestern Canada has become a boundless prairie of waving wheat. The Landes of Gascony are now much more than half covered with pine trees. In 1902, 22,000 square miles of the Algerian desert had been made fruitful by artesian wells. The "Australian desert" is rapidly being irrigated and turned into grazing land. Almost 70,000 square miles of "desert" in India has been reclaimed. Sir William Willcocks is now engaged in reclaiming 19,000 square miles of the delta of the Tigris and Euphrates, and more than 4000 square miles of the Gezireh Plain between the Blue and White Nile and being transformed into cotton plantations

Thus is man, by obliterating natural barriers, improving upon nature.

Look in Siberia for the Superman

SIBERIA'S unique population should possess considerable interest for the eugenists, says the New York Medical Journal. From 1658 until 1900, from 2000 to 20,000 Russians were exiled annually to Siberia, mainly for voicing ideas and opinions which favored democracy and other modern theories; in other words, the inhabitants of the territory seem always to have been men and women of original habits of thought, of mental qualifications which would have made them prominent and distinguished under a form of government more like our own.

As we understand it these exiles have lived an outdoor life, rigorous, perhaps, but of the most healthful kind. Consequently we find in Siberia a most unusual combination of intellectual equipment of high quality with physical surroundings adapted to furnish bodily vigor and excellent health, a union produced by accident of the exact kind that eugenists are striving to effect by design.

The colonization of Siberia by the method above referred to practically ceased 14 years ago; there should be now, even in the absence of first rate schools, a population with most exceptional gifts, veritable supermen if the theories of the eugenists are soundly based.

THAT the planet Mars is covered with a system of canals—first announced by Schiaparelli in 1877 and confirmed by Pickering and Lowell since—is disputed by many astronomers, who say flatly that they cannot see any such markings on the surface of our sister planet.

It is on the existence of these canals that rests the theory that Mars is inhabited by intelligent beings, for these canals, as described by the astronomers who have seen them, are too mathematically straight to be due to any but artificial causes. E. C. Slipher of the Lowell Observatory staff, who has been studying Mars for several years has collected a large series of photographs and drawings by many observers at many different times and in many widely separated places, all of them showing the canals in an unmistakable way. Upon these he bases an article in the Scientific American, in which he argues that they are absolute proof of the existence of these canals.

It must be understood that it is not the actual canals on Mars that show in the photographs. Mr. Slipher explains this as follows:

"Older by cosmic eons than the earth, and further on in planetary evolution and development, Mars has but a meager supply remaing of either air or water Therefore it is supposed by Lowell that this network of canals and oases comprises an artificial system of irrigation intelligently constructed to utilize and distribute the water from the melting snows over the desert planet. The visible markings, of course, are not the waterways themselves, but blue-green strips of vegetation sprung from this irrigation. Two significant facts found by the observations here suggest, more than any other perhaps, their artificiality, and otherwise substantiate his theory: First, the marked geometric directness with which the canals in general connect with the oases and isolated points, which makes them appear quite similar to a distant view of a system of railways. Second, the characteristic way in which they seem to push out from, and develop with, the melting of the snow caps."

As proof that these canals are not imaginary Mr. Slipher calls attention to the agreement of the drawings and photographs made by Schiapparelli, Lowell, Fournier and himself at Flagstaff, Ariz.; Alianza, Chile; Milan, Italy, and Setif, Algeria. Those who have seen and photographed the canals are those who sought out the best atmospheric conditions for their observations; those who have failed to find them and who wish to discredit the existence of the canals will not seek the conditions possible for their visibility. At Lowell Observatory they have been seen with both the 24-inch refractor and the 40-inch refractor, and with apertures anywhere between six and forty inches. Mr. Slipher saw them through the clear desert air of the Tarapaca in Chili with a three-and one-half inch telescope.

The photographs bring Mars to a size from four to six times greater in surface than the moon is to the naked eye. Though atmospheric disturbance makes it impossible to photograph the canals as clearly as they can be seen with the naked eye, many of them have been recorded by the camera hundreds of times and can be recognized as easily as the mountains and valleys of the moon. In all, about [illegible] canals and oases have been observed at Flagstaff, Ariz., in the complex network which covers the planet's surface.

How Wireless Messages Are Sent to Earth by Aeronauts

IT is almost impossible in practice to send a wireless message to a man in an airship. Not that the wireless waves fail to reach him, but that the noise of the engine is so terrific that it makes the faint signals in the telephone receivers inaudible.

It is, however, comparatively easy for an aviator to send wireless messages to the earth. Marcus D. Manton, in an article in Aircraft, describes the apparatus, which is different from that used on land and sea, because there is no possibility of getting a ground connection.

"The apparatus required to make this wireless transmission possible," says Mr. Manton, "is as follows:

"An alternator and transformer, the alternator being driven by the engine used for propelling the machine, or by means of an auxiliary engine or motor of some description, or in place of this alternator and transformer an induction coil may be used, the electric current being supplied to it from a battery of accumulators.

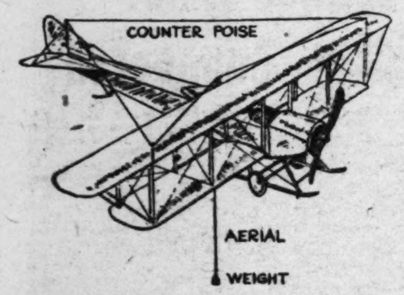

Fig. 2.—Wireless attachments of an aeroplane. (From Aircraft Magazine.)

"One of the two above-mentioned devices is necessary to supply the transmitting aerial or antennae with energy, and in order to produce the necessary oscillations in the aerial a spark gap must also be provided.

"A key is also necessary to enable the operator to make and break the electric circuit at will, in order to produce dots and dashes for transmitting a message in the Morse or other prearranged code."

To surmount the difficulty of having no ground connection a device called a counterpoise is used. "It consists of two distinct aerials, apart from one another and each highly insulated. The aerials on airships usually consist of a single copper cable about sixty to one hundred yards long, one end of which is connected to the instruments; to the free end a weight is attached and then lowered over the side of the machine so that it hangs vertically below the machine when in flight. A winch is provided so that the aerial may be quickly wound up or down.

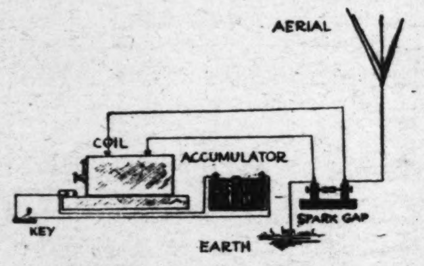

Fig. 1.—Diagram of wireless outfit.

"In the event of the machine having to make a forced landing and giving no time to wind up the aerial, the wire cable is severed by means of an aerial cutter, which is fitted to the side of the winch, and the wire falls clear of the machine, so that the aeroplane lands in the ordinary way without any danger of the aerial catching in trees or being tangled up by the propeller.

"The counterpoise used in place of the ground connection consists of a system of wires running from the planes to the tail of an aeroplane or from end to end of the car of a dirigible. Fig. 2 shows how a counterpoise and aerial are fitted to an aeroplane. Such machines take two men—pilot and operator."

Optophone Enables the Blind to Read Letterpress

AN instrument enabling blind persons to "read" ordinary letterpress by means of the ear was shown at the June meeting of the Royal Society by its inventor, E. E. Fournier d'Albe.

Any instrument which translates light into sound may be called an optophone, and this is the name given to this one. For such translation an intermediate link is necessary. This must be either heat or electric current, and, as a current of only a few thousandths of a microampere is audible in the best modern telephones, this is the link selected.

In an article in Nature Mr. Fournier d'Albe describes his optophone by saying:

"An optical system throws the image of a glowing Nernst filament upon the printed paper, laid face downward on a suitable perforated disk. This image is broken up into a series of seven or eight luminous dots, flashing with different musical frequencies by means of a rotating siren disc placed immediately in front of the Nernst filament.

"Some light-sensitive preparation, preferably of selenium, is placed close to the type so as to receive whatever light is diffusely reflected by it. The size of the image is made to fit the size of type to be read, and a sensitive telephone is put in series with the selenium and a battery, or with one of S. G. Brown's telephone relays.

"It has been found possible to obtain a readable sound from type of the ordinary newspaper size. The straight black stem of a letter produces silence, and a curved letter, such as S, produces in its passage a set of gradually changing notes which are characteristic of the letter, and cannot be mistaken even after only a few minutes' practice. To learn the entire alphabet in this way should be a matter of a few weeks or months, but the amount of practice required will vary very greatly from one person to another, as only a musical ear can readily detect the emission of certain notes from a given chord. Given an adequate alignment and line-changing mechanism, there is no reason why, with sufficient practice ear reading should not be almost as rapid as the ordinary reading at sight.

"The choice of type is, of course, unlimited. There is no arbitrary element in the determination of the sounds required to represent the various letters, as each type will automatically produce its own characteristic sounds. With practice a blind person should be able to construct a visual image of any new letterpress type at first hearing."

Thanks a Thousand Times

I received the Machine a month ago and I am very pleased with it. It is a beauty in every way. I thank you a thousand times for it. I am proud to own it and I have had so much fun with it that I could not write to you before to tell you that I received it. John Crymes, 524 Ave. C., Bayonne, N. J.

Fifty Friends Saw It

I received your Motion Picture Machine last Monday and that night I showed it. I had about fifty friends. They could not all fit in my theater. I am very proud of my Machine, it is a dandy, and my friends say they wish they could have one too. Alex Mentler, 3666 Lisbon Rd., Cleveland, Ohio.

Been Offered $40.00

I do not suppose you remember me, but I am one of the boys who received a Motion Picture Machine some time ago, and will say it is the finest Motion Picture Machine I ever saw for a premium. It shows a beautiful picture on the screen. Well, many thanks to you and I wish that every boy in the United States could own one. I have been offered $40.00 for it, and could have got more for it. Walter Jones, Yellow Pine, Ala.

20th Century Entertainer

I received my Motion Picture Machine and thank you. I worked it the same day I got it, and it worked fine. I find it a Twentieth Century Entertainer, and I don't think any home is complete without one of your Motion Picture Machines. Henry Thurman, 317 S. Johnson St., New Orleans, La.

Gives Shows Regularly

I find my Motion Picture Machine a fine one. I am satisfied with it in every way. No Machine can come up to it. I give shows regularly and everybody is satisfied with its fine work. W. A. Mulford, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

Sold 300 Tickets

I am very thankful for that wonderful Machine and I think it is the best I have ever seen. I am going to have an entertainment to-day and therefore I have not much time to write letters. I think I will make about $10.00 I have sold 300 tickets already. Joseph Rauch, 2411 W. Broadway, St. Louis, Mo.

Made $15.00 With It

I thought I would write you a few lines to let you know I received my Motion Picture Machine, and it is a beauty. I never saw a better Machine than this. The first day I got the Machine, I started off and made $15.00 with it. Master J. Hughes, 908 Hamilton, Duquesne, Pa.

Made $2.00 in One Night

With all pleasure I write to tell you that I received my Motion Picture Machine about six months ago, and I made $2.00 in one night, and hope that my friend Jerry Leigh's will be as good as mine. And I lost my list, so please send me another one. Paul G. Taylor, 5 Pratt St., Newnan, Ga.

More Than Expected

I am very well pleased with the Motion Picture Machine which I received in good condition, as it is more than what I expected. I thank you very much for it and it is the first time I ever tried such a thing. Ben W. Jenson, R. R. 2, Des Moines, Iowa.
